O-Week Couple Already Sending Out Save-the-Dates

by Anony-whaaat? ~ Daily Bull

HOUGHTON -- Residents of West McNair were ecstatic to discover their first-ever piece of mail as college students waiting for them on Monday afternoon. Pretty much everyone in the building was treated to a garish, lacy, multi-colored postcard proudly announcing the wedding of two freshmen: Annalise Davis from Midland, MI and Garrett Young of Oconomowoc, WI.

According to Orientation Executive Staff member Andrew Webb, the couple hit it off from the moment their orientation group first did ice breakers. "They both had just started at university, are both studying civil engineering, and both enjoy ice cream," Webb explained. "According to their OTL, the chemistry and magic was pretty obvious." He also said that Annalise and Garrett were each others' first friend at Tech, which made their connection all the more potent.

For the entirety of O-Week, the two (affectionately known by their hallmates as "Garralise") attended every mandatory ses-

Student Found Dead After Discovering Netflix

by Alex Dinsmoor ~ Glorious Leader

Michigan Tech Public Safety has recently released information relating to the death of a student in McNair Residence Hall early Wednesday Morning. The student, whose name is withheld in order to protect their identity, was found dead in their dorm room with their laptop in what detectives are calling a "Netflix induced homicide".

"We are coming to a point in time where streaming technologies are becoming so commonplace that persons who should not have access to "streaming" now can binge on their favorite shows for dangerous lengths of time; which is exactly what happened in this case."

The police autopsy shows that there were lethal levels of 30 Rock, Arrested Development, and Portlandia in the student's system, leading authorities to believe it was a Comedic overdose. "It normally starts with the user partaking in a few episodes of the first season from a friends suggestion, but often ends much, much worse," forensic scientist Johnathan Burtz told The Bull. "In this case, it appeared that the student was lured into the comedies by a free Netflix trial which was started during O-Week

sion together, ate every meal together, and even discovered that they both own blue shirts. After watching The Lion King together and singing along to "Can You Feel the Love Tonight," they knew it was meant to be. Young took his very first foray into downtown Houghton over Labor Day weekend, where he spent half of his college savings on a diamond carved into the shape of a Husky head. He proposed in a "secret, romantic location" that the pair "had discovered!" while walking one evening.

"It was Princess's Point!" exclaimed Annalise's thrilled roommate-and-now-maid-of-honor, Melanie Hudson, who is apparently both misinformed and a terrible secret-keeper.

The wedding is set to take place on October 26, exactly two months following the couple's very first "hello." Annalise said that although the engagement seems short, the two are already finalizing the last of the details. "It's nothing fancy," she confided to the Bull, "but we don't need fancy. We only need true love."

A short reception will follow the ceremony, which is reportedly going to be officiated by that sort of weird guy down the hall who doesn't talk to anyone, but who apparently took some certification test online to officiate weddings. Because mixed-gender roommates are not allowed in McNair, the couple plans to move all of their possessions into one of the study rooms on the third floor of the Library.

When accused of putting nefarious interests ahead of those of their fellow students by taking away the study space, the couple reportedly shrugged, saying, "If IT can do it, why can't we?"

I imagine their nuptials will be something along these lines. How could it possibly go wrong? Remember kids, what happens in Vegas stays there. Unless you bring that one kid that posts everything to Facebook. And chlamydia. That shit travels.

and progressed from there."

"I didn't know what was going on," the dead student's roommate stated, "I've been a recreational Netflix user for over six months now without any serious health issues. I watch a show every once in a while when I have the time, but I've never binged on any show." When we asked about her roommate, she told us that "it all started really slowly and picked up. At first, she just watched an episode a day or so, but then she took a turn for the worse, eventually skipping meals and refusing to sleep or go to class. Then yesterday, I woke up and she was dead."

Campus authorities are currently working with IT to block Netflix on campus connections to prevent other events like this from happening. RAs in the residence halls have also been instructed to add Netflix checking to their rounds in the residence halls. "Not only do we have to do rounds, we now have to check the halls for any cellular mobile routers to ensure that no one is illegally streaming."

The Bull has reached out to Netflix for comment.

"We here at Netflix have always encouraged users to enjoy in moderation, as over dosage is very real possibility as with any dangerous substance. We will be working with authorities to ensure that no further incidents like this happen to this community."
