Government Shutdown Imminent Over Controversial Bill

by Alex Dinsmoor ~ Daily Bull Editor in Chief

WASHINGTON D.C. - With a government shutdown seeming more and more likely by the day, it's seeming that neither party is looking to budge from their current stances on many subject areas. Among the issues being contested are the continual implementation of the Affordable Care Act and tax cuts, however, it seems that neither of these two issues have torn our government as much verbiage sneaked into the bill at the last minute.

Congressional Republicans have taken a very profound stance in their resolution, stating that all toilet paper in all government offices must be placed so the paper is dispensed under and not over. With such language in a bill, Democrats nationwide have been up in arms contesting such a radical idea. "It's ludicrous," one Democratic senator stated, "we have built our country on a foundation of placing the toilet paper so that it goes over and not under. I don't think I could live in a country who thinks otherwise."

Prominent Republican, John McCain spoke in defense of his colleagues, stating that "many scientific studies have shown that placing your toilet paper under reduces the amount of foreign bacteria that may find itself on the paper. We as a government must protect its citizens from germs!"

Even the media outlets have spoken on the issue, with many pundits up in arms over such a polarizing issue. "This is just another one of their crazy tea party ideas," MSNBC host Rachel Maddow stated on her show, "for them to incorrectly define how I should place my toilet paper is ridiculous!" CNN has also taken up the story, offering a 24-hour 'Toilet Paper Watch' to their viewers. In the time it's been on air, they've discussed everything from the ethics of toilet paper to bringing on experts from Kimberly-Clark to discuss proper toilet paper techniques. One viewer called their coverage "better than pooping".

Trapped on Breakers: Survivor's Journal

by Veronica Tabor ~ Daily Bull Staff Writer

In this rare occurrence, the Bull has gained access to the private diary of Carl Myers, a fourth-year student who was recently abandoned by his friends on the Houghton Breakers. Myers was found after 10 days confused, scared, and barely alive. He is currently in recovery, but he has allowed us to exclusively premiere his survivor's journal. Take heed, as these writings are not for the light-hearted:

Day 1:

It is cold. I am beginning to fear for my life. My friends abandoned me out here, the sober people that they are. It all began so innocently, a few friends lighting broomball brooms on fire and walking out to the end of breakers, only to somehow return back in the dark. I've decided to write this journal using engineering paper and my own blood to document my brave struggle.

Day 2:

It's light out. Or is it? The daylight simply might be a mirage on my eyes. I think I might be able to get up but at the same time I don't actually know if I've actually woken up yet.

Day 3:

I smell pizza. Is that possible out here? I think someone is grilling a pizza on the beach. Who does that? Can I have some?

Day 4:

The elements are starting to take a toll on me. My arm fell off but that's alright because now I can use

President Obama additionally went on the air on Sunday night to share his views on a special message to the nation. "It has come to my attention that there has been language inserted into an upcoming bill that defines toilet paper placement as under and not over, and as President of the United States, I will make it my first priority to veto any bill with such language, even if it may result in a full government shutdown. We cannot drive our nation in such a direction." Pundits are calling his speech "one of the most inspiring butt-related speeches of our time."

If a government shutdown is to take place, it will on Tuesday morning, however we can all take solace from the fact that we can wipe our butts as we wish. 🍌 it as a backscratcher. These little grains of sand are rather uncomfortable.

Day 5:

There's a spider crawling toward me. NOPE NOPE NOPE. I will surely be eaten alive.

Day 6:

So it turns out the spider was actually a leaf, which is unfortunate because it took me at least 4 hours to fend it off and kill it. Never trust Mother Nature, kids.

Day 7:

Things are getting really fuzzy. I'm getting really confused. Today I'm going to attempt eating the rocks for survival. The sun is beating down on my skin. It's at least 55 degrees out, which is far too warm for September. Something is seriously wrong.

Day 8:

I'm realizing that today I'm missing the beginning of hockey season. I cannot stop crying. This hurts so much worse than my arm falling off.

Day 9:

I sense that rescue is near. I haven't been answering texts because it's too hard to text with only one arm. My friends are slowly remembering that I exist. Day 10:

Rescue is coming! I can see them in the distance, climbing out on the rocks to save me. I jump up and start sprinting toward them. It was at that moment I realized, I was fully capable of leaving this entire time. I was just too lazy to get up. But that's alright, because now I get to chill in the hospital for a week and not do homework. So I think that's a win/win situation there.

Carl will be unavailable for comment after this publication. He has described his current status as "Busy doing nothing". We at The Bull are hoping Carl makes a speedy recovery. 🍌
