Man Locked In Room, Forced To Write Article

by Joshua Mazure
~ Pseudo-Guest Writer

It was reported earlier today that MTU student Joshua Mazure was kidnapped by members of the Daily Bull, locked inside a room, and was told he was not allowed to leave until he had written an article at least 500 words in length.

"All you have to do is write an article, and you'll be free," treasurer of the Daily Bull Rico Bastian said. "You can write about anything, anything at all. Just be sure to be done by press time. You don't want to know what will happen if you're not done by then. I like you Josh, and I'd hate to have to do to you what I did to Alex [Piotrowski], so just be a good little boy, and write me that article."

Mazure knows very little of his current situation, but from what he has gathered, he knows that he is scared and wants to go home.

"I have no idea what's going on, but they said I need to get some quotes in here somewhere," Mazure said. "I don't even know where I am. Last thing I remember, I was working on my orgo homework, then the next thing I know, I wake up in this room

Student Overdoses on Discount Halloween Candy

by Alex Dinsmoor ~ Guy in Charge

HOUGHTON, MI – Late Saturday night, a student was admitted to Portage Health in Hancock, MI after it was reported that he overdosed on discount Halloween snickers and twix bars that the student bought from Walmart earlier that day.

"We all went to Walmart earlier that day to get our portion of the discount candy," one of the student's friends told The Bull, "but as soon as we got there, we knew something was wrong with him. The instant he was in eyeshot of the Halloween section, his eyes bugged out. It wasn't clear if he was having a religious experience or just a really severe case of sweet tooth."

Shoppers reported seeing him rushing through all of the aisles, filling his cart with any and all candy. "It wasn't until he put Almond Joy in his cart that we knew something was wrong" one his friends stated. "We tried to pull him away, but no matter how hard we fought, he kept going back. It was like Chris Christie at an all you can eat buffet!"

Editor's note: yes damn it, people still eat these bundles of Joy.

After checking out, Walmart employees helped the student carry his stash to his vehicle, since his total came out to multiple carts and hundreds of dollars of candy with little bats and ghosts on them. "I kind of just assumed he was buying candy for a campus event" one worker told The Bull, "I had no idea it was just for him... Who eats Almond Joys anyways?"

Authorities were called to the McNair Residence Hall at 4:15 AM on Sunday after an RA reported to have seen a sugar-related overdose. "It was one of the worst cases we've with a type-writer and a clock and I'm chained to the floor. Rico came in and told me that I have until five to write a goddamn article for the Daily Bull. I'm not even good at writing. Why would they do this to me?"

As the clock ticks closer to his deadline, Mazure continues to try his hardest to write a decent article that will hopefully please the staff of the Daily Bull and get him out of his confinement.

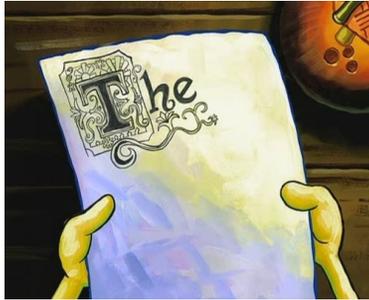

"I only have a few minutes left until deadline," Mazure said. "I don't know what he's going to do, but I haven't seen Alex in a few weeks. I've been hearing screaming in another room. I've already written him articles, but they said none of them have been good enough to publish. This article is my last hope."

As Mazure heard footsteps approaching and looked up at the clock to see that it was 4:58, he quickly typed out what little more he could to increase his word count.

"I never thought it would end like this," Mazure said. "So many things left undone, so many things unsaid.

You never really know what matters until you're faced with your own mortality. I don't tell the people close to me just how much they mean to me."

We all know that feeling.

"So much time squandered on meaningless little games," he continued. "So many hours logged in Skyrim, and for what? Some fancy virtual armor? That's not how life should be lived. If I ever get out of here, things are gonna change, and if I don't, tell my parents I love them, and tell Peter [Jurica] that he better keep his damn hands off my Cheez-Its. Jeff [Mott] gets those if I die."

It is currently unknown if the staff will keep their promise and let Mazure go after they read this article, but Mazure doesn't have any other options. ☹ ever seen." A Public Safety officer told The Bull, "it was like a candy bomb exploded in his room, it was utterly disgusting." The student was rushed to Portage, where he was detoxed of all of the sugar and was put on an IV of vegetables and diet soda.

"After he was admitted, we knew we had to take drastic measures to save him" one ER doctor reported, "however we were forced to try risky techniques such as giving him Diet Coke immediately instead of slowly weaning him with Coke Zero."

Cleanup is still taking place in McNair, with the entire housing staff for the building on hand to clean the dorm room so it is inhabitable once the student is released. "There was so much caked on candy everywhere. We never knew it was possible for an entire wall to be covered in caramel, but he somehow found a way to do it." Facilities additionally had to import an extra dumpster in order to dispose of all of the sugary mess.

At time of publication, the student was in stable condition. ☹
