Obamacare Website Designer Hired as Head of IT

by Someone Who Actually Wrote an Article ~ Daily Bull
Michigan Tech's administration has announced that it will be bringing in an industry professional to head the IT department here at Michigan Tech after many student complaints and issues with the department were brought to light in the past few months.

"In order to appease the Michigan Tech community and specifically those who rely on our networks, we have made the decision to replace the current head of IT with an individual who is experienced in the industry" a Michigan Tech representative told the press, "this individual, who will remain nameless while the hiring is finalized, was the key developer for the extremely successful Affordable Care Act marketplace website. We're hoping they bring their success and experience to this University."

The decision was reportedly made after one Michigan Tech IT staffer's relative called them to share their "love" of the ACA website. They raved for hours over it's consistent uptime, speed, and how they were actually able to use the website. When the IT staffer heard this, they knew they had found the one who could "lead Michigan Tech into the future of reliability."

With the change of IT department heads will come a complete redesign of Banweb to make it "useful for one or two people at a time". Changes include the feature in which it will randomly disconnect you from the MTU servers while you are trying to do something, an button to drop all of your classes that looks like a log-out button, and a page that automatically plays Adele and delivers Ice Cream to your house every time Banweb goes down during registration.

Ten Reasons You Know It's Winter at Tech

by Alex Dinsmoor ~ Editor in Chief

If you haven't noticed yet, we've already gotten our first sticking snow of the year, and students campus-wide couldn't be happier. Sure, all of this white stuff does make driving a bit more difficult and McNair hill a bit more extreme, but overall everyone loves it. Here are the ten reasons you know it's winter at Michigan Tech.

1: Walmart sells out of brooms and duct tape.

With the thick of winter right around the corner, students will make their annual pilgrimage to the hardware section of Walmart to procure all of the duct tape and brooms they can get their hands on.

2: People completely forget how to park in parking spots

If there's one thing snow means, it's the lines in the parking lots no longer exist. As long as your kind of fits, it sits; even if that means taking up three parking spots and a section of the sidewalk...

3: Puffy coats

It's inevitable, every time it snows for the first time, all of the first years bring out the giant coats their parents had to buy for them. They come in all shapes and sizes, yet they all are gigantic.

4: Snowboards and Skis in kitchenettes

If you've ever lived in the dorms, you know that there's someone down the hall that loves winter sports, and even more than that, drying their gear in the nearest kitchenette.

5: That's not just hot chocolate in that mug

Even though you think you're clever with your thermos filled with the only thing that can get you through your lecture in 135, we all know what's really up. And we're doing it too! The only challenge is trying to figure out the one alcohol that no one's tried before.

6: Timberland boots and Uggs

Look down, you'll understand.

7: HOCKEYHOCKEYHOCKEYHOCKEY

Even though it's been going on for some time now, winter is and will always be the true season of Hockey. Friday and Saturday nights will no longer just be for drinking anymore! And for those of you who aren't the sports types... HALF OFF PIZZA (sometimes)

8: Everyone mysteriously gets a new TV

Sure, Thanksgiving break is great for heading home and visiting your family, but for many it also holds a much more important holiday, Black Friday. Tons of your friends will all go out on that Thursday night/Friday morning and finally buy that TV they forgot to buy before heading to college.

9: Carnival and everything that comes with it

Even though Carnival doesn't start for quite a few more months, it's still the high point of winter activities. Everyone gets a well-needed break from school for five days of drinking and wintery activities.

10: You (and everyone you know) posts about it online

It's only a matter of time until you or someone you know will post about all of the snow online somewhere. Be it Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, Tumblr, Vine, Myspace, Friendster, LinkedIn, Live Journal, or whatever other social network you use, snow is bound to end up online somehow. ☹️
