Tech Reading as Inquiry Book 2014 Announced

by Anony-whaaat? ~ Staff Writer

Sound the trumpets, alert the Twitspace -- Michigan Tech has announced that its 2014 Reading as Inquiry book will be the infamous 50 Shades of Gray! In a bold but well-justified move, the University decided to steer clear of touchy-feely books with good messages, opting instead for a book featuring touching, feeling, and good massages.

"But, Tech," scream the masses, "why would you ever want to have a work of such utter debauchery as semi-demi-not-quite-required reading for incoming freshmen?" The reasons are several:

1. Girls are all curious and want an excuse to read it without seeming like skanks.
2. Boys are all curious and want an excuse to read it without seeming like pervs.
3. Boobs.

The discussion groups during Orientation Week will focus on the importance of 50 Shades as a piece of high literature, the title's significance to our region's winter (50 shades of grey and brown snow), and the physical improbability of some sexual positions.

Another reason that the hanky-panky bestseller was chosen was to revitalize the Reading as Inquiry program. "We have noticed that a lot of these engineers don't really want to read a book over the summer," sighed VP of Student Affairs Les "What's Cookin'" Cook. "Even though we've been picking really great books with fantastic authors as speakers, you just can't argue that 5-S-G is going to produce almost 95% participation."

Be the DJ You Want to Listen To

by Nathan "Invincible" Miller ~ Daily Bull Immortal

Even though there are tons of apps out there that let you listen to music and spin tunes with friends for free, it can often backfire when you get stuck listening to garbage song after garbage song. Okay, we get it Pandora, someone in the history of time thought it was a great idea to pair N.W.A.'s "F the Police" with Colbie Caillat's "Fallin' For You," but that doesn't mean that it should be replicated. Ever.

Therein lies the problem with all these music streaming services: you're never quite guaranteed that the next track will be something you want to hear. Heck, that's the problem with all music outlets unless you collect all of your music in a central database. In this day and age, who has time for that!? Just kidding, I do. And you know who else? Loads of quality DJs at Michigan Tech's very own college radio station, WMTU.

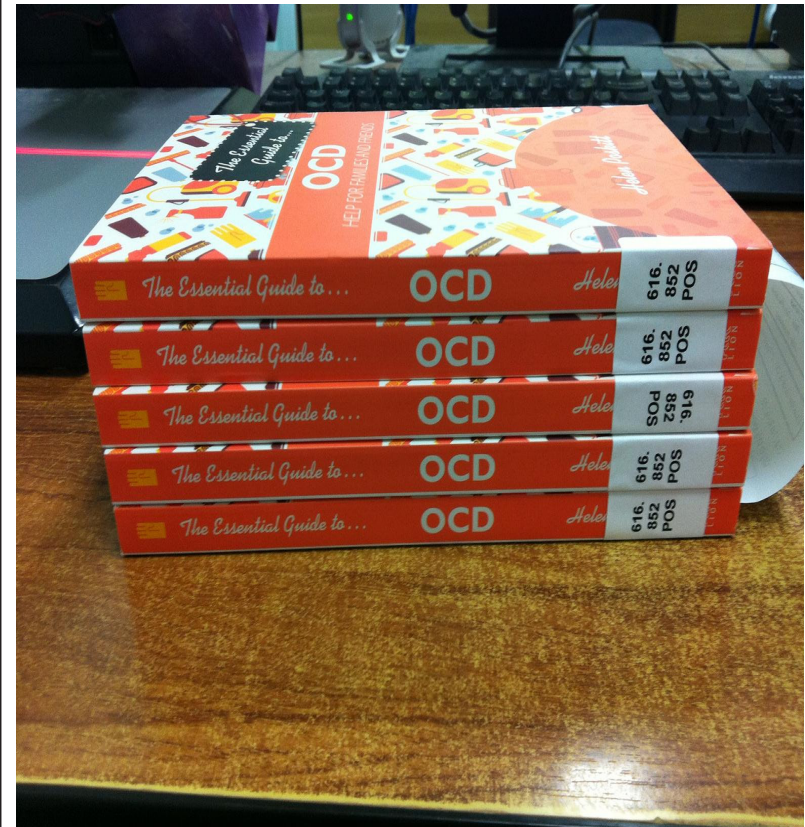

Really the only solution to avoiding crap on the radio/Pandora/turntable app is to be the DJ you want to listen to. That way when the next song is an immortal classic by the pop group Aqua, you have only yourself to blame! Not that you'd do that to yourself, if you are truly in charge of the music that OTHER people have to listen to. Unless, of course, your aim is to have the worst show ever. Don't say I gave you that idea.

WMTU is recruiting fine young music aficionados like yourself to be DJs that are actually worth listening to. You might have the best taste in rock music from the 1980s, or maybe you specialize in classical music scores from oscar-winning films. As sappy as it sounds, 50 Shades of Gray narrowly beat off the other top competitors: Game of Thrones (a longer read, noted Cook, but "bound to be at least half-read by most students."), The Cat in the Hat (calculated to fit the average college student attention span), and The Hobbit (but only the last 60 pages, to align with the last 8-hour installment of film).

Students are on their own in terms of purchasing the book, since Campus Bookstore officials were uninterested in ordering 1,000 used copies. "Can you IMAGINE what would be in there?!" winced Cook. "I don't even want to know." 🐾 if you can dream it, you can be it. So dream big and maybe you'll be the next electronic music producer to put on a rodent skull and press play. You never know when you'll get your big break!

DJing at WMTU starts with you showing up to one of their DJ recruitment meetings, to be held this Wednesday and Thursday, from 7-9 PM in the vicinity of Fisher 138 & 139. You'll know where to find us by the sound of our raucousness. Show up to one of these meetings, learn a little bit about WMTU, shout some cuss words really loudly in unison a few times, and bam! you're on your way to becoming a real life radio DJ. It's like joining a cult except a lot more friendly. Trust me, the kool-aid is really good! 🐾
