Student Orgs Frustrated With Carni Organization, Create New Festival

by Anonymous Sheep ~ Activist

After missing deadline after deadline after deadline for Winter Carnival events due to not finding out about them until the day after, several student organizations have brought it upon themselves to form a new celebration of winter called "FrostFest".

"Historically, Blue Key has done a less than acceptable job of advertising really important information for Winter Carnival. For example, special events start this weekend, but no schedule has been released. And they always change it about five times before it's final. How's that going to work out?" FrostFest "Bitch In Charge" Elizabeth Banks said. "So, along with every other organization that has missed a deadline this year, we have decided to create a new event and run it our way with our rules."

FrostFest will take place the week before spring break. School will not be dismissed, so events will be taking place at every location in Houghton that was available. Events include "King of the Hill: Snowbank Edition" at the SDC, sled races down Agate St., broomball at the Dee, and a stand-up comedy competition at the Continental Fire Co..

Banks said that they do not want to compete with Carnival, as it is a Tech tradition and they enjoy seeing the snow statues. They just want to create a new tradition that is more involved within the community and easier for groups to

by Chase 'Cupcake' Peterson ~ Mini Cake

Sometimes great things happen in life, not my life per se, but in someone's life. So when the Editor in Chief gave me a plane ticket to Ireland and said "go live on the street over there for a while and come back with an article" I was at a loss for words (not an easy task I assure you). Little did he know that I actually have friends over in that part of the world and was able to spend my nights sleeping off my whiskey and beer induced naps in the comfort of a bed, it was only later I found out that the ticket he gave me was a one way. So without further ado, I present The Daily Bull's Guide to Ireland:

The first thing you will notice is the money is all funny and differently and the exchange rate doesn't favor the dollar. Seriously, what kind of weird economy is that? Here we are the most powerful nation in the world and I need to shell out $1.45 for every Euro. Now this let me tell you makes things pricy damn quick, that eleven Euro movie? Yeah that just cost you $16, American! Your 4 Euro mocha? $6, I think you get the idea. I will say this for their money, it makes sense, a 5 Euro note is small, like 2 inches by 5 inches (if that) and their 100 euro notes are huge clocking in at 6 inches by three and half inches, and the 500 Euro note? Well let's just say that you need a folder to carry them around in.

Next thing that struck me was the way everyone talks. I'm a bit of a theater buff and as such have picked up an ear for accents and the Irish accents that I got to listen to while I was over there were awesome. Seriously, I would chat up random people at the pub just to listen to them talk and listen to their accent. So cool. I would not advise trying to mimic their accent in public though, I did that a few times and at best I was told politely to stop and at worst I was threatened to be cut off, so yeah, listen all you want, but mimic at your own manage participation in year after year.

"We really want to make this event a success, despite how last-minute it is," an events chairperson said. "So we're publicizing this to the best of our ability. Deadline reminders will be continuously posted on our social media, included in the Student News Briefs, and we're plastering campus with bi-weekly table tents and posters." The leaders of the event hope that by doing more than sharing an events calendar via a facebook post, they will have significant success and few problems .

Registration opens on Sunday, January 26, and all groups are invited to participate, whether they're a registered student organization or just a house that feels like they have a solid shot at becoming inaugural FrostFest champions. For more information, contact gradeAbullshit@mtu.edu risk.

Speaking of the people, damn near all of them are natural born storytellers. Even the guy working the front desk at the natural history museum (which they call the dead zoo) had loads of stories and was more than willing to share with the Americans. I don't know if it's in their genes, their shockingly red hair, or if they all need to take masters classes in storytelling, but they are really good at weaving a yarn that's worth listening to.

Finally there was the music, I'm not going to say it was all awesome, but it was all kinda awesome. It amazes me what people will choose to do for a living when they don't need to worry about health care. The musicians were able to hone their craft on the street as a busker (or street performer) and when they got a gig in an actual pub, you knew you were in for a treat. Perfect example, I was wandering the streets of Dublin when I heard the blues coming out of a pub. Actual honest to goodness South Carolina blues, I popped in and listened to the guy wailing away on his guitar thinking "damn, an American over here doing his music thing, very cool", the guy finishes the song and starts talking in a full blown Irish accent and launches into a medley of pub songs. Blew me away.

I could probably write a book about my two weeks I spent there, but I have the attention span of a gnat hopped up on caffeine, so I won't. I will say this though, if you get the chance to go anywhere outside the United States, go, you will learn so much, not only about the place you are visiting, but also about yourself.
