My Life as a GTA Side-Seat Driver

by Anony-whaaat? ~ Staff Writer

The scene: Christmas 2013.

All the ladies are crossing their fingers for necklaces, gift cards, loose leaf teas, and new yoga 'equipment.' There are movies out on DVD, fantastic dresses on clearance, books, and so much more. The options are limitless.

The guys want one thing, and one thing only: Grand Theft Auto V.

My particular guy got exactly that. For many hours, many evenings, I have sat by his side, reading books and being shed on by cats, occasionally peeking up over the pages to wonder, "What the hell is going on?!" Watching GTA is like watching a neverending movie -- and it's fantastic. Here are just a few highlights, as I have seen them [SPOILER ALERT!].

Weed guy. There is this guy that pops up all over Los Santos with some kind of special variety of weed. The main characters in the game smoke it, and ridiculous shit happens. They get high, then the mission pops up at the bottom of the screen:

Avoid being abducted.

And then you have to kill 45 aliens with a plasma-laser-outer-space weapon. Or, later, you actually do get abducted (but the aliens reject you and you have to skydive back to earth in a haze).

Frigid Winter Weather Wreaks Havoc on Local Police

by Kara Bakowski ~ Steppin on da News Beat

As temperatures and snowflakes are both dropping like mad, the number of reports being filed with the City of Houghton and City of Hancock police stations is skyrocketing.

"It's been a madhouse," Houghton police officer Dwight Smith said on Tuesday. He stated that they have seen an increase in car-related reports, mostly accidents, stuck vehicles, and "asshole plow drivers".

As students, comprising 50% of Houghton's population at this time of the year, realize that it's too damn cold to walk to school, they have finally begun searching for and digging out their cars. Those unfortunate enough to have to park next to the street complain about their inability to find their car due to the massive snowbanks created by plow trucks on their rented property. Those fortunate enough to find their car after two weeks of avoiding shoveling are "shocked" to discover that their car either won't start or won't make it out of their parking spot without a small army's worth of friends to push it.

"But surprisingly, the most common call we've had is to report missing limbs as missing people," Officer Smith said. "They seem to think that just because they can't see or feel their legs, they're not actually there. I think the cold is starting to make people delirious, to be honest." Residents are being told that not being able to feel a limb is not enough to warrant a missing person report, and that they should seek immediate medical attention.

Meanwhile, in Hancock, residents are being asked to remember that the police are not a taxi service, and that they are not responsible for bringing drunk residents home from Houghton bars and frat parties. Rides should be arranged before leaving home, or residents should opt for bars on their side of the bridge.

While not a police station, the Portage Heath University Center has also reported a sudden increase in patients seeking treatment for frostbite. Doctors advise students to cover every inch of their body with fluffy things, and to call in sick to work or school if their walking commute times are longer than it takes to develop frostbite on exposed skin. The registrar's office has stated that handwritten notes from parents will be accepted as a university-excused absence. ☹

Rampaging. One of the characters has a special ability called 'rampaging.' It entails you becoming semi-invincible and sprouting weapons out of thin air. Your goal is 'neutralizing' hipsters. Or 'neutralizing' renegade army men. Almost nothing can waste you, and you can always have grenades.

Waking up drunk in the desert wearing a negligee and tighty whities. It actually happens more than you might think.

Heists. The bank robberies are just a dandy to watch. It's so far beyond walking in with a gun and demanding the cash. It's days of preparation, getting a bulldozer as an escape vehicle, getting distracted and using the bulldozer to overturn cop cars, putting the bulldozer back, getting a bunch of guns to take out the whole bank... essentially, it's a jolly good waste of time that gets you tens of thousands of dollars.

Bailing out of things by accident. It's sort of like making a typo; you mean to hit X, but you hit square instead. So instead of braking (or whatever happens when you press X), you end up bailing out of the vehicle at 95 mph. On an overpass. In the mountains. Full of weird gypsies. OBVIOUSLY.

THE BRITISH FREAKS! Nigel! Nigel, Nigel, Nigel, what a treasure. He is a visitor from jolly old England! He and his wife crop up early in the game, rooting through the trash cans of famous people living in Los Santos. You get brought on board as their accomplice to steal things for their celebrity 'collection.' Used underwear, wads of drain hair, dog collars, you name it -- if it's belonged to a famous person and could be construed as kinky, Nigel wants it.

Overall, I would honestly say that watching The Other Half play GTA is fun. I really hope there is a bonus mission at the end that involves driving alien spacecraft at warp speeds, running over three headed space-hookers and getting pulled over by hyperintelligent shades of blue. ☹
