Chemical Engineer Gets In Way Over Her Head

by Chase 'Cupcake' Peterson ~ Pastry

A shocking revelation in the extreme sports community has left Thaddeus Gutter, a married 31-year-old extreme commuter, in the hot seat. Recent photos of him doing the horizontal tango with two Houghton ladies have popped up on the internet, and there have been quite a few words said about them.

Extreme commuting, for those not in the know, is an extreme sport in which participants attempt to get from point A to point B in the craziest way. It was recently discovered that an MTU ChemEng grad got in way over her head and her pay grade when she attempted to find affordable furniture to furnish her fabulous apartment in Flagstaff. "All I want is a goddamn couch, end table, coffee table, bookshelf and maybe a dining room table for cheap" she exclaimed. "When I got offered the job working for the Hurbel-derp-a-fart Mining Company, they promised me that the town was packed with old people that would be dropping like flies and I could pickup heirloom quality furniture at Walmart prices."

After throwing anything she could get her hands on at the reporter taking down her story (and if you have never been hit by a beanie baby traveling at the speed of a major league fast ball, well, you're all smart cookies, you do the math) she continued "You know what I found when I got there?! Old people! Old people as far as the eye could see, and you know what they were doing, or more specifically NOT doing?!" As another beanie baby when zipping by the authors head. "They were not shuffling loose the mortal coil. I swear they must have been putting something in the water to make

by Chase 'Cupcake' Peterson ~ Disguised Bran Muffin

Back in the spring of 1974 The Lode was a pretty hip place to work (the Tech Ratio was much higher back then, I think it was somewhere near the limit of x^2 as x approaches infinity, ahh, some things never change) This lasted for all of one issue before they decided to go back to being serious and reporting real news, I mean, its cool that they covered broomball and all, but they never talk about the aliens that are secretly running the bio-medical engineering department, now that's news!

Anyway, back to the awesome spring of '74. There were many things happening, with the Tech Ratio as high as it was there were no women offer their input as to how thing would be made better (because lets face it guys, when left to our own devices we do dumb things). One alumni recounts that fateful spring.

"The whole thing was very groovy man, we had our people who were doing their own thing, you know writing about astrology, numerology and the like, you know the real down to earth stuff" he remembered "then we had this group of guys that were just out there on the fringe man, they were writing about how the government had spiked the cheese with laxative in a secret bid to help the toilet paper manufactures stuff their coffers, just really wild ideas man"

It is surmised that during this period of experimentation with various substances and ideas that someone had an idea so great, so monumental that they were driven insane and it couldn't be helped but to utilize the idea to make the greatest newspaper in the world. Alumni Joe Fishbein recalls that day.

"So there I was just writing away for the Lode, putting the finishing touches on my piece for 50 different ways to deliver snow to your roommate's underwear when from the desk next to me I hear my editor in chief start ranting and raving about mad science while he was smashing ostrich eggs on his chest.

"This was considered pretty normal behavior for the time of the semester, but I knew something was wrong when he began to quote 'A Clockwork Orange' backwards while beginning to dress himself in nothing but feathers"

It is believed that shortly after this incident that the editor in question was institutionalized for three weeks in the then Walker pool where it is surmised that due to a mixture of chlorine, LSD and pot smoke had a serious effect on his brain chemistry because he wrote for the entire time he was locked up.

After being released he published the very first Miserable Tech Lode in which there were nothing but wild stories about things that never happened, scores for sports that never existed and recipes for the most delicious cake.

A source in the administration at the time relates their experiences "I remember that guy, he was so dangerous that after he ran his little stunt we had him shipped off to the experimental physics lab where they were working on time travel, from what I understand it worked because he was transported back to the 1400s and began publishing Ye Casual Movement for the squirrels and deer.

"I don't know how he survived, or who he passed it on to, but the next thing I know there is the oldest paper on campus called The Daily Bull. I don't know what we did, but we cant undo it now" he laments.

these fossils keep on shuffling around!

When it was pointed out to this young grad that she was an engineer and there was a hardware store within 10 miles of her apartment. She jumped up and down with joy and enthusiasm and took off with purse and hardhat in tow. It was well after midnight before she returned to her apartment and promptly went to work.

That was two weeks ago and she has not been seen since. When the police when to investigate her home all they found was something that looked like a cross between a particle accelerator, coffee cup and a dimensional tear that lead to a realm of unspeakable horrors.

Subreddit of the Week: /r/StuffThatMakesMeLaugh

by Kara Bakowski ~ Inappropriate Humour Afficionado

If you have spent any amount of time on Reddit, you know that the community has a tendency to post funny, inappropriate, honest reactions to almost everything. Unfortunately, it is not possible to see all of these funny comments because it's impossible to read every thread, and half the time they get buried anyways.

Fortunately, /u/SouthpawEightyNine, the genius that he is, created /r/StuffThatMakesMeLaugh. He created it as a place for him to post screenshots of comment threads that, well, made him laugh. By sharing these publicly with the world, he is doing a great service to the reddit community.

After gaining fame by linking to the subreddit in an AskReddit comment, other users have begun to submit content as well. It has recently expanded to include other things that are funny on their own, such as 4chan greentext and GIFs. The humor is similar all across the subreddit, so if it's your brand of humor, you will definitely enjoy it.

 Well back in 7th grade my science teacher was telling us about how swimmers shave their bodies and wear those cap things so they are more hydrodynamic (I think i'm using that correctly). So I raised my hand and asked why they don't cut their nipples off. It seemed reasonable at the time, and nips do have little bumps that could impact their performance.
 After asking everybody looked at me like I was some kind of freak and the teacher didn't bother answering me.

 I am a swimmer, and my coach has a story about one guy he was on a team with that covered his chest with shaving cream before he shaved, then proceeded to accidently shave off his nipple.

 But was he more hydrodynamic?

 It was only the one nipple, so he just swam in circles.
