Desperate for Content: The Daily Bull to Start Reporting Actual News

During these unprecedented times, everyone has been pushed and tried to their limit. No where has this been more apparent than in satire news.

Daily Bull editor Ben Dover explains:

"What is really hard to explain to people, is just how bizarre reality is. I mean, playing madlibs gives you some weird shit, but have you tried watching the real-time collapse of western society? There's no way for us to compete anymore! So effective immediately, The Daily Bull will be switching all our operations over to actually covering reality, rather than trying to be witty about it."

Many things influenced the Bull's decision, but one of the top ones was the disappearance of other news agencies.

"There used to be real news organizations who did this work before, but times are tough for them too. We miss having The Lode, they actually went and did reporting and kept up to date on stuff probably. It gave us the excuse to just fuck around and belch out whatever the hell the squirrels in our brains told us to. Now in their absence, students are looking for someone, anyone who can regurgitate whatever the University Senate tells them. That has now become our cross to bear."

Mr. Dover had a few more thoughts to offer.

"What we've come to realize is that reporting 'actual news' isn't that different from what we were doing before. In many ways it's actually far easier, but that doesn't mean we should shy away from innovation. We're looking into printing on recycled toilet paper in order to save on costs as well as reducing our environmental impact and ensuring that the quality of our journalism is on par with industry standards."

Local Students Spread the Good Word

Last Friday morning, September 24, a group of MTU students congregated around the clock tower on MTU's campus to spread the good word of our Lord and saviour, the Bullhead. The students came bearing tidings of great joy, and grave warnings of impending doom. Their messages included warnings of the dangerous effects of both 5G and Xi Jinping on male genitalia, the preferred sexual preferences of amphibians, and how birds and geraffes are Totally real and not a government surveillance plot.

"We're exercising our First Amendment right to hold signs," one of the activists said, as they held their sign proclaiming "SKELETON WAR". The sign, of course, referring to the inevitable rise of the boney boys from the grave to return and steal the bones and milk of the living for their calcium and minerals (an important part of a healthy diet). The imminent demise of human civilization at the bony hands of past humans and other skeletal structures- including organic chemistry- is a core tenant of the Bullhead belief system.

A small number of the activists there seemed to be confused as to what they were actually there for. Some held blasphemous pro-furry signs proclaiming "We are Huskies, not Sheep", others terrible infographics that were too small to read and printed on an 8 ½ by 11 sheet of paper slapped the wrong way on a yardstick with Elmer's magic purple glue sticks. Yet the majority of those present were coordinated and focused on spreading the Word. The main message the students wanted to get across, according to one of the coordinators of the action, is that no matter what your opinions or beliefs are, always remember that Bush did Pearl Harbor.
