Facts on Sleeping in Minecraft

Minecraft Forum:

Almost every time I play on Normal mode and build myself a secure hole in a mountain or hill no monster can get into, I run into this bug, which happens if any monster is nearby whether it can see or pathfind to me or not! I have tried digging further in and sometimes this works, but a lot of the time this doesn't help! The only solution it seems is to sleep in Peaceful mode, which really wrecks trying to practice a Normal mode startup on a new random world and not just because your heart bar auto-heals itself!

Has anyone found ways to stop the message in the title from appearing if trying to use a bed in a secure boxed in area like a small hole dug into the side of a mountain or hill?

Cheers ...

Minecraft Bedrock Wiki:

Sleeping is an in-game mechanic which is activated when a Player interacts with a Bed. The Player can sleep at night to automatically skip to dawn (and to skip a Rainstorm if one is present).

The Player must tap on a bed at night, the screen will slowly fade to black. After the transition is finished, he/she will wake up. If there are Hostile Mobs nearby, the Player will receive an on-screen message that reads You may not rest now, there are monsters nearby and will not be able to sleep. If it is day, it will display You can only sleep at night. If another Player taps on the bed a Player is currently in, it will display This bed is occupied.

Mojang (rip) has the Beds set-up to check if the Player is in a secure location. When a hostile monster is within a 9 block radius around the Player, the message pops-up: "You may not rest, There are monsters nearby."
