Local Man High On Life

Guy Who Vibes with This

Kobe Boot

Recently, a man in a beanie was found on Walker lawn at MTU, in the rain with no shoes or socks on. Reportedly, he was throwing his footwear items around, playing games such as boot-basketball, flip-the-boot, boot bowling, and sock slamming, as well as dancing jigs and tap numbers, as passers-by steered around him. The man was also repeating bold and strong proclamations, including but not limited to:

“We’re all playing a game that was rigged from the start.”

“Where’s my degree? I want a degree in that!”

“There’s a sack of balls attached to my body, like... Like a nutsack!”

And, of course,

“I don’t play ball games; I play games that take BALLS.”

All accounts agree that the man, who has been referred to as “Math Jesus”, “Your Friendly Neighborhood Tweaker”, and “Hippie in the Rain”, was acting peacefully, and also nailing impressive fadeaway jump shots from three-point range. About an hour after the first report, campus police arrived to talk with Mr. Beanie, as he continued engaging in his boot-related activities. Eventually, after landing two perfect double-boot flips (a 9.9 out of 10 according to the panel of judges), he collected his items and scampered into the back of the police van, at which point they drove off.

It has since been reported that the man was tested and found to be under the influence of the legal psychedelic called Life. It seems he was just living his best life, frolicking in the rain with a confidence and bravado that not even a Hollywood actor could hope to pull off. Additional information was withheld for privacy reasons, but it was announced he has recovered from Life and is home safe and sound.
