Tis' the Season for Annoying Christmas Songs

Grandpa's Lawyer

It is once again Christmas time, and that means time for jingling bells, slow piano, vowels warbled for inordinate amounts of time, and attempts to "re-imagine" older songs into newer, brighter versions that are somehow worse than their predecessors. That's right folks, The turkey has been cooked, potatoes mashed, and it is time for you to dust off your earplugs as the tirade of overplayed holiday songs hit the radio once again. Any reasonable person would make a personally biased list of songs that suck silver-balls in the holiday season, but why go through the trouble when plenty of other people have done that instead?

The most named song among various buzzfeed-reminiscent countdown articles as "annoying" is the song "Do They Know It's Christmas?" by Band Aid. This song truly is a work of its time, and there is no better era for it to have clawed out of than the 80's. As the enlightened James Baldock of Metro put it "Patronising, pompous, and stupid.// Rich white men tug at the heartstrings by singing about Ethiopian famine, declaring that 'There won't be snow in Africa this Christmastime' (yes there will, there's loads on the Atlas Mountains) before enquiring 'Do they know it's Christmastime at all?' (probably, seeing as most of them are Christian or Muslim).// Yes, it's for a good cause. But do we have to? Really? Can't we just give the money instead?'". The man is absolutely right, and it is no surprise that this song was highlighted by many people as overplayed and just generally annoying.

Another highlight that topped the list was the song "Christmas Don't Be Late" by the legendary Alvin and the Chipmunks. While catchy the first time around, the voices of these pint sized pop stars starts to grate on the ears approximately 3 rounds in, and has been seen to cause symptoms of mania after its 10th sequential replaying. The recommended dosage per season is 0 listens, as the name of the song alone is enough to get those annoyingly autotuned sopranos playing in your head.

There was one song that was only mentioned in one article, as the least annoying of the 20 songs listed, that certain writers would have assigned to the top of the list, and that is Mariah Carey's "All I Want For Christmas Is You". It's more overplayed than Harry Potter Marathons used to be on ABC Family, and it's just catchy and peppy enough that you will inevitably find it stuck in your head at some point inexplicably in mid-January.

And Now, a Short Sponsor Break

Raid Shadow Hedgehogs

We interrupt your regularly scheduled Bull issue to bring you a message from our sponsor: Nard VPN. Nard VPN is a top-rated VPN that protects your morally questionable internet traffic with Liechtenstein-military-grade encryption, preventing dirty, greasy, Dorito-dusted fingered hackers from getting their grubby hands all over your personal data. Nard VPN is one of the most recommended VPNs for getting around search blockers and concealing your identity online, so you can browse certain dubious websites of your choice without anyone knowing you secretly watch bear porn (not the animal you neanderthal). If you don't know what that means, download Nard VPN to make sure Fidel Castro can't track your subsequent searches from the safety and comfort of the CIA bunker he shares with John F. Kennedy and Dick Nixon.

Nard also has servers in at least 9 different countries, including Chad, Oman, Hong Kong (oh god please no not the CCP), Sealand, and Denmark if it was a real place not part of a fiendish scheme conjured from the minds of megacorps like LEGO and Disney seeking to market their smallish mermaidens and their plastic universal interconnecting bricks. This means you can get around your countries internet blocks without even breaking a sweat, maybe to watch the original El-Mañana music video by the Gorillaz that is inexplicably blocked by the US government and has been since 2006, or play video games on servers in places where the average age is lower than the age of consent. You could use it to watch British television, to watch the British eat their British food and laugh at them for putting beans on toast like absolute maniacs .

Nard is also one of the fastest VPNs on the market, with flawless connection speeds and no lag, up to 69 Yiffabytes per second. It's widely known as the fastest militariest gradiest encryption service in Panama. It's so fast it can almost catch up to Dad, who went out for milk and cigarettes back in 2000. Maybe it can even go fast enough to turn back time to before that one regrettable relationship you had back in high school... in retrospect, the cat-like hissing at people should have been an immediate red flag...

You can find out for yourself with Nard's 30-day free trial, which comes with a paid subscription of 80085 Vietnamese dong a month. The subscription comes with a no-money back guarantee, so if you don't like it, it sure does suck to be you! Get Nard today at nardvpn.invalid.com/notOwnedByTheNSAweSwear. We're told you won't regret it.
