G.O.P. Holds “Better Name” Convention

Midiclorian Ynoppoite

The G.O.P. recently held a party-wide forum to discuss the biggest problem facing the political party. It's not waning support, the midterm elections, or the fact that support from extremists groups is the only thing keeping them afloat. No, it's the fact that pretty much all right-wing organizations have some of the dumbest, most poorly thought-out names on this progressively less-green planet Earth.

Seeking to rectify the issue, the G.O.P. set up a convention and brought in professional naming experts (three full-time astronomers and two fanfic writers, fields very famous for coming up with creative names) to help organizations choose better names. The convention included panel discussions, name workshops, and, of course, autographed Trump-Kennedy 2024 merchandise stands.

What finally motivated the G.O.P. to hold the convention was seeing the names of similarly-aligned student organizations at MTU. One example was Turning Point USA, which is normally abbreviated to “TPUSA”. This has led to most students and people who hear of the club to refer to it as “Toilet-Paper USA”, which, come-on, is a total give me. But TPUSA isn't nearly as bad as Young Americans for Freedom, or “YAF”. The name already is a little bit suspicious, since “Freedom” is pretty vague, all told. But, as soon as you hear that “YAF” sounds an awful lot like “Yiff”, the idea that Young Americans for Freedom is actually a secret furry club trying to gain freedom to show their furry-ness in the world can never, ever leave your head. Alternatively, it could be a furry club seeking to create an independent furry state. Even if furry suspicion isn't the first thing that jumps to mind when someone hears “YAF”, it's just kind of a weak name anyways.

Egregiously bad names like Tarantulas Prosper USA and Yiffing All Friday might have been the main reason for the convention, but other, slightly less terrible names were targeted for updates as well. College Republicans at Michigan Tech is about as bland as plain, dry, shredded wheat cakes, and Students for Life sounds like either:

A) an org dedicated to fostering a mindset of growth and learning in students both now and in the years to come (in which case the name would be great, actually).

B) A support group trying to inform people that, in fact, school doesn't finally end after college and you actually just Prestige 1 back into grade school.

C) Grad school.

It certainly doesn't immediately sound like a pro-life student org, unless you really think about it for a bit, squint, tilt your head and have it described to you.

The G.O.P. hopes that, after the convention, right-wing club stop having such shit names. Interestingly, the name “G.O.P.” itself came up for debate during the convention. It was suggested that, really, the Democrats would be better suited to that name, since most of their senators are far above the “way-too-old-to-be-here” line. However, someone pointed out that Trump was plenty old, and so the name was kept.
