Student Pledges to Fight Sir Isaac Newton

Necrodancer

Bill Lye

A fed-up MTU student, after emerging from a Physics in Fisher 135, clambered up on top of the emergency phone tower outside the building and declared to the world:

"Fight me Isaac Newton, you powdered-wigged virgin coward!"

Passers-by largely ignored this student—slight insanity is expected after midterms— but someone did inform the student, who was still Titanic-ing from the top of the phone tower, that Sir Isaac Newton is, in fact, dead. In response to this, the student yelled even louder:

"I don't care if he's dead I'll throw hands with his ghost watch me."

While seemingly far-fetched, the prospect of Isaac Newton: Punch Out, is remarkably feasible. Mimomus Ded, a 100-skill level Necromancer with a BS in the field and a Masters in Reanimation from the Cuddlesby College of Magic in Smiley, Goodhampshire, explains:

"It's well known that around Halloween, the bridge between the living and the dead is at its strongest— that is, the reactionary force from the member IC on the member UP is at its lowest. This is the reason ghosts, ghouls, paranormals, banshees, wraiths, phantoms, and spirits of all kinds are much more abundant in this season than all others. It's also the reason you don't want to fuck with my wife after a long day this time of year..."

Basically, if there ever was a time to resurrect Sir Isaac Newton, now is the season to do it. Not, of course, to bring back one of the greatest scientific minds in history, but so that you can throw hands in an epic brawl with the figure who's celibacy and nerdiness makes him an icon of a standard Michigan Tech student.

The spirited match-up would certainly be interesting and evenly-weighted. In one corner, there is Sir Isaac Newton, whose reanimated state gives him clearer lines and an uncomfortable sixty-frames per second refresh rate. Being dead makes him very difficult to defeat, and the fact that he can literally throw his hands should not be overlooked either. Yet his powdered wig, which remains perfectly intact even after the centuries, provides an excellent grapple point, a significant disadvantage.

In the other corner, you'd have the MTU student, who has the advantage of being alive, but only on the outside. On the inside, of course, they died after the first U-Chem 1 exam, and they've been persisting solely on spite, caffeine, alcohol and Mountain Dew Major Melon since. The 1:1 ratio of blood to depression in the average MTU student tends to effect all the negatives of being dead with very few of the positives.

This student was determined, and anyone with enough Physics-fueled hatred to summon the zombie of a 294-years-dead scientist should not be underestimated. Whether or not this fight will actually occur is still up in the air, but it has been confirmed that, if it does happen, the ref will be none other than the legendary ghost of Morgan Freeman.
