Meat Mineshaft, Dubbed Meatshaft, Discovered under Wadsworth Hall

Meatsy Business

An anonymous student was treated to a terrifying scene unfolding at Wadsworth Hall yesterday. While attempting to locate the Cherry Room, John Doe stumbled upon an unlocked staff-only door. Like any good hooligan does, he decided to check it out. Upon entering the room he discovered a staircase leading directly underneath the building. "It was like the MEEM staircase. A liminal space that smelled like teenage boy and funk. Are those the same thing?", Doe recalls. At the bottom of the staircase Doe was truly horrified to discover a mineshaft filled with a pulsating red substance covering the walls. Doe hid behind a conveniently Doe shaped bolder, overhearing a conversation between Wadsworth dining hall staff.

"They were talking about something called meat logistics. They called the room the meatshaft. They had sectioned off parts of the meatshaft for different meals... The meat they were gathering was for the chicken parmesan". Doe reports that the meatshaft was long and quite girthy. Doe reports the meatshaft connects directly to the nuclear waste storage area underneath Fisher. He does not believe these two areas are related.

"Students should know where their meat is coming from. Whether its a meatshaft, lab grown, fresh from the shelves of Walmart, or anything else. I can't believe they've hidden this for so long!"

Administration refused to comment, and instead, threatened to raise tuition.
