Wind Harp Stolen By Storm Chasers

Donald, Duck!

As the construction of the HSTEM building began, MTU had the wind harp moved to a safe storage location, to be returned to its pedestal after construction finished. However, it instead disappeared without a trace, launching an investigation. Along with filing a police report, MTU hired several private investigators, including a team of four drugged-out hippies and their lab-accident talking dog who live in the back of a van and eat dog treats, and another drugged-out British dude who wears a Yankee with dual brims and no Yankee. However, none of them had even got so much as a clue before a video on Barstool Saskatchewan was sent directly to the Dean's Instagram account by a random internet sleuth with too much time on their hands.

The video shows a pickup truck driving down a freeway with the wind harp in the bed, secured with the most reliable redneck method known to mankind: ratchet straps and a good ol' boy sitting in the bed holding it down with one hand and a beer can in the other. In the video, the truck appears to be driving away from a funnel cloud, the caption reading "This bitch tuned to the brown note smh". Indeed, viewer discretion is advised: only view if already sitting on the toilet (which, let's be honest, you're probably already doing anyways).

This may prompt the question: how did the wind harp end up in the adrenaline-and-Red Bull– fueled hands of a bunch of Canadian tornado enthusiasts? The current leading theory is that a group known as the Prospectors of Inclement Storms: Saskatchewan posed as wind-harp transportation and storage specialists, showed up to the construction project, and yanked the harp right off its pedestal, before making off with it in presumably the noisiest getaway known to mankind. Since then, it appears that they might be using the harp as a sort of tornado detection tool. Coupled with the Rock of Forecasting, they can accurately tell when it is windy and rainy, and presumably know that it's time to chase after storms or not. How did they get the harp all the way to Canada? What did customs say when they saw the Harp cross the border? Did anyone actually notice the wind harp was gone until just now? Who knows! But the Daily Bull is dedicated to finding out.

Popping up on Walker lawn early in the afternoon this past Wednesday, Turning Point USA - with the aid of their trusty dunk tank - set up an enthralling show. One of their members, sitting precariously on the plank that was fated to dump him into what we assume was water below, begged onlookers to "dunk him like a naughty little socialist." Other members around the dunk tank carried signs saying "SOCIALISM SUX," "DOWN WITH BIG GOV," and "WE SHOULD HAVE MORE STUDENT LOANS, ACTUALLY!"

At the time of writing, investigators at the Daily Bull are still trying to figure out what this group has against socializing. Our reporters attempted to ask about their motives, but we were immediately interrupted with cries of "STOP TALKING TO US YOU DAMN SOCIALISTS!" After which, the members were dragged off to the dunk tank kicking and screaming as their replies counted as socializing. We reached out to Keweenaw Socialists, the student org that we assumed they were trying to "dunk" on, for comment: "Yeah man, it kinda sucks. We feel really shitty about it. Like, we're just trying to have a good time over here," the entire student org said in unison. "We hope TPUSA didn't really mean any harm with this. We're 100% willing to talk it out with them over coffee or something. Or maybe they just want to be left alone. Ah, well. We've nothing against introverts." We thanked the socialists for their time, and they proceeded to walk away in a perfectly straight line and completely in step.
