“No Way to Prevent This” Says #1 Dunk Tank Manufacturer

The Daily Bull is sad to report that in last week's Mass Dunk-tanking, 4 students were made moist. Thankfully, no casualties occurred.

Last Monday at approximated 6:90am, Senior Fresh Prince, Junior Steele Dan, Junior Le Bronjames, and Sophomore Leonard Nimoy (no relation) -- four of Michigan Tech's most Huskied-Up students -- were subject to an ambush Dunk-Tanking that left them wet, cold, and destroyed their text books and electronic devices.

"This is just something that you never think can happen at a place like Michigan Tech. Like, shouldn't the water be frozen by now?"

Bronjames responded in an interview. This incident is among the growing trend of mass Dunk-Tankings in the United States. To date, 2022 has experienced 508 mass Dunk-Tankings which have left 545 severely wet, and thousands more moderately wet.

The Daily Bull reached out to Michigan Tech's Coordinator of Under Water Events and Topics (UWET) Jonathan Jimbles for comment on this alarming trend. "Well, first off, my thoughts and prayers go out to the students affected by the Dunk-Tanking Incident. It's a real travesty, and I am deeply sorry they got wet. I can understand the Michigan Tech community is frustrated that this was allowed to happen on our safe campus, so I have started working with my team at UWET to try to address this issue. First things first, I think every student should have a bag of rice in their backpack, just in case they get dunked and need to keep their phone dry, you know? I also, and I've said this for a while, we need to have a paid campus security guard that monitors all the Dunk Tanks. This security guard should be the only one to escort people into and out of a Dunk Tank, and should be the only one handing out baseballs. We can't have rogue dunkers putting random people in Dunk Tanks and using their own baseballs to hit the target. Imagine if they brought a basketball! It would be so easy to hit the target with a basketball."

When asked about whether or not UWET would take action to ban Dunk Tanks on campus, Jimbles responded, "Well, I don't think that's necessary. Dunk Tanks are a great source of summer fun, and when used by a proper, trained person, they are a great tool. You can use them for carnivals, fundraisers, you name it! The important thing to remember is that Dunk Tanks don't get people wet; people get people wet. It is truly a shame that the perpetrator was able to commit this act, but because TPUSA forgot to lock the Dunk Tank after they were done with it, he was really allowed to dunk who he wanted. And you know what? Banning Dunk Tanks just doesn't make sense because there's other ways to get people wet! What's to stop a student from running around throwing water balloons? Or shooting people with a squirt gun? Hey, when you think about it, throwing a snowball is kinda like a dunk tank, too. Are we gonna ban snow from Michigan Tech?"

This Week's Weather Report

Michael Ock

Hey everyone, it's Mike! The Daily Bull's number 2 meteorologist here with another wonderful weather report! Hope everyone had a great week, because we have another one coming right up! And many more after that! So many more! The amount of weeks are infinite, unstoppable, and merciless! The pain is unending! Anyways, let's hop right to it.

Monday will either be sunny, cloudy, windy, rainy, snowy, or any combination of the five; with a chance of sleet, hail, snow, thunderstorms, acid, or any combination of the five. Due to inclimate weather, we recommend putting on sunscreen, dressing in warm clothes, carrying an umbrella, getting a snow plow ready, boarding up your windows, or any combination of the five.

Tuesday will be cloudy all day with a slight chance of rain between 12 AM and 11:59 PM, excluding the times of 6:45 PM, 3:12 PM, 12:03 AM, and 9:00 FM.

Wednesday's report is... whatever's happening right now! Look outside, and that's the weather! Congratulations, you're now 1/7th of the way to becoming a meteorologist yourself! (please don't though I don't want to lose my job again please I have children to feed)

Thursday is going to be that uncomfortable temperature where it's a bit too hot to wear a long sleeved shirt or a jacket, but just cold enough that short sleeves don't cut it either. Like, when you stand out in the sun it's nice and warm, but step into the shade and Bam, goosebumps! We recommend wearing a sweatshirt and repeatedly taking it on and off at frequent intervals throughout the day.

Grimblusday is the day that we are finally all consumed by the fog! Yippee!

Friday is... well, we're not quite sure about Friday right now. See, she's been going through a bit of a phase as of late. Keeps locking herself in her room every night and blasting My Chemical Romance. I keep trying to ask her, "Hey sweetie is everything okay?" but she just rolls her eyes at me and says "Ugh, you don't get it. And don't call me that. I'm 14 now. I'm basically grown up." and goes back to scrolling through Hot Topic's catalog. Kids these days, am I right?

Saturday will be clear. It will be all so clear. It can see so very clearly. Everything that has happened, everything that will happen, everything that is happening, everything that could have happened. It has been watching you for as long as you have existed. It has seen your failures, your successes, and the mundaneness of your everyday life. It saw you graduate highschool and it felt proud. It saw you get a poor (but still passing) grade on your first calculus exam and it still felt proud, because you did your best. It saw you fall off your bike in 2nd grade and scrape your knee in such a way that in certain lighting you can still see the scar, and it still felt proud, because despite it all you still learned how to ride your bike. It's watching you read this article, and maybe this time it's a little less proud, because you should be working on your homework right now, but it still trusts that you'll be able to finish it in time because you always do. It will continue to watch you as you finish this article, as you finish this semester, as you finish college, at the first day of your first job, at your wedding, at the last day of your last job, and at your deathbed. And it will love you at every turn.

Sunday will be a cool 0 degrees Kelvin due to the heat death of the universe, so be sure to get out your winter coats and turn those thermostats up!
