DAYS SINCE THE PEP
BAND CRASHED NMU

The True Reason Behind NMU's Pep BAnd.

Can't BeeLeave It

We're all familiar with the Husky Pep Band. Michigan Tech's campus has been blessed with 116 decibels of innuendos and cheer since the band's founding in 1928 (as an ROTC band. More about that in a later issue!). Every Husky is familiar with the jamming' tunes and bright stripes of our beloved pep band. One thing students may not know though, the Husky pep band is banned from Northern Michigan University's football dome...

The pep band was requested (in writing) by NMU's athletic director to never return after a particularly funny performance. The band is still BAN(d) and is not permitted to return as an "opposing band". This whole story is simply surface level, though. It makes no sense for a prestigious "knowledgeable" university to ban such a crowd pleaser! The Daily Bull decided to take a closer look at exactly why The Living Proof of the Second Law of Thermodynamics, The Cream of the Keweenaw, The Pride of Pastyland, and The Second Best Feeling in the World is banned from NMU.

After minutes of detailed researching, we came across a webpage discussing the divination of bees in ancient Minoan Crete. We learned according to religious ritual illustrations found in Crete, Priestesses "dressed as bees, and are shown dancing together on a golden seal found buried with the dead" (Temple of Theola). This ritual was thought to honor the dead and bring forth the bee goddess. Priestesses who preformed this ritual were given the gift of divinity and the ability to see fate. Notably, in the NMU football dome, the center field is adorned with a golden image of a wildcat with golden checkerboard patterns in the endzones. The Pep Band also wears black and yellow stripes, representing that of a bee. Coincidence?

The pep band's song and dance must be related to this knowledge ritual. They take on the persona of bees and dance on top of a golden seal (the NMU checkerboard and/or the wildcat). NMU is trying to stop the pep band from taking on the divine right of fate. This controversy must come to light! As a university, it is our right to take on the flaming torch of knowledge and pass it onto our peers. How is this divine bee ritual any different?? For shame, NMU. For shame. The Daily Bull DEMANDS the pep band to be unbanned IMMEDIATELY, so we may complete the ancient ritual needed to fulfil our destiny.

Socialization Officially Declared Obsolete by Student Org

Dunk'en Donut

Popping up on Walker lawn early in the afternoon this past Wednesday, Turning Point USA - with the aid of their trusty dunk tank - set up an enthralling show. One of their members, sitting precariously on the plank that was fated to dump him into what we assume was water below, begged onlookers to “dunk him like a naughty little socialist.” Other members around the dunk tank carried signs saying “SOCIALISM SUX,” “DOWN WITH BIG GOV,” and “WE SHOULD HAVE MORE STUDENT LOANS, ACTUALLY!” At the time of writing, investigators at the Daily Bull are still trying to figure out what this group has against socializing. Our reporters attempted to ask about their motives, but we were immediately interrupted with cries of “STOP TALKING TO US YOU DAMN SOCIALISTS!” After which, the members were dragged off to the dunk tank kicking and screaming as their replies counted as socializing. They have yet to return. We reached out to Keweenaw Socialists, the student org that we assumed they were trying to “dunk” on, for comment: “Yeah man, it kinda sucks. We feel really shitty about it. Like, we’re just trying to have a good time over here,” the entire student org said in unison. “We hope TPUSA didn’t really mean any harm with this. We’re 100% willing to talk it out with them over coffee or something. Or maybe they just want to be left alone. Ah, well. We’ve nothing against introverts.” We thanked the socialists for their time, and they proceeded to walk away in a perfectly straight line and completely in step.
