Daily Bull Front Page Missing!

DJ Benjamin

Early on Monday morning, the Daily Bull office was in uproar. The editing staff of the world-renowned student newspaper were searching madly, scrambling to find the front page for that day's edition. They searched everywhere, from Brad the printer to the drawer containing Bandora's box (empty except for a healthy work-life balance for engineers). Yet even after numerous interrogations of the printer elves and a raid of the Lode to see if the page was page-napped, they had found nothing.

Authorities were notified of the missing page, and it was arranged for a MILF Alert (Missing Il-Legible File) to be sent out to all the journalists and writers in Houghton County. Investigators quickly received several leads, including indications that the page might have been stolen. Following the reports of hot MILFs in their area, authorities and the Daily Bull editorial staff set out in the famed Bull Bus to locate the missing page.

The first MILF report led them to a fraternity house over in Hancock, where they questioned some of the brothers there. The fraternity said that as far as they were aware, no MILFs were present at the house. However, they did mention they knew a cougar who was rather familiar with the topic of hot MILFs (having sniffed out several briefs and other documents in the past). After receiving information from the fraternity, Investigators called the cougar, saying they were looking for a hot MILF. The cougar strangely spoke in an Indian accent and asked about their bank information- to help find the article of course. When the Daily Bull admitted they still hadn't set up a bank account despite intending to for about half a year now, the cougar hung up.

As of the last report, the page is still unaccounted for. Authorities have extended the search area to include Hell, Cancun, and the Moon. Descriptions of the page say it is about 11 inches tall, and around 30 minutes old, with a title block crappily screenshotted from old articles because the original vector file was lost. There was a picture near the top of the page that was hurriedly photoshopped but has a 50/50 chance of being the funniest part of the article. It was described as "ridiculous", "decently funny", and "totally high quality we promise".

If you know of any articles that fits any of the descriptions above, please send them to the Bull at bull@mtu.edu
