Student "in stable condition" After Suffering Tummy Ache

Big Sephiroth

A local student at Michigan Technological University, who was diagnosed with a tummy ache this morning, has been declared to be in stable condition. The student who fell victim, now known to be second year Electrical Engineering major Roy Howard, woke up at 10 AM and sent a message to a Discord Server stating "ouhggh tummy hurt im not going to class this morning," according to his friends who have been closely monitoring his condition. Investigation into the cause has determined Howard's illness to have resulted from a mixture of only eating hamburgers and Arizona Iced Tea for the past two weeks and having to wake up before noon on a Monday. Doctors report that Howard is leaning towards recovery, having been able to eat a bagel (without cream cheese, unfortunately) and scroll mindlessly through TikTok for 2 hours - a great improvement since his admittance, but not enough to ensure his survival. His friends and family request that you keep Howard in your thoughts and prayers, and that only a select group of people will be allowed to make "This is so sad, I can't believe he's gone ☐ Fly high, Royster ♥" posts on Instagram if he passes; this list will be published shortly. Howard's case marks the 78th tummy ache this month, up from 73 at this time last month.

Tummy aches are currently the leading cause of death among college students in 2023, surpassing the common cold in 2018 and "not feeling like doing anything in particular" in 2021. Reports suggest that up to 95% of all college students will pass away in their first semester from a tummy ache, with only .05% managing to graduate. "The unfortunate thing is that there's nothing we can do about it." Says Dixie Normous, a local nurse who has treated tummy aches since 2017. "There's no cure for a tummy ache. All you can do is hold their hand and say, 'it's all right, you're going to a better place. There's no Statics homework in heaven, unless you're going to hell, in which case it's all Statics homework.' Truly the Evangelion of tragedies."

PINKCOW Issues Warrant for Putin's Arrest

DJ Benjamin

Due to the his actions regarding the Russian invasion of Ukraine, Russian President Vladimir Putin has been charged with war crimes by the international community, and the International Criminal Court (ICC) has issued a warrant for his arrest. The 123 signatory nations of the Rome Statute are obliged to arrest Putin should he come within their jurisdiction, and other states, including the United States and India, will face international pressure to do so even without being legally bound. While this does significantly limit Putin's travel options for his summer resort getaways, the Kremlin has largely brushed off the warrant. Seeing as he is in charge of the largest country in the world, and he wasn't really planning on leaving the relative safety of Russia and allied states anytime soon, that's an understandable reaction.

However, the Kremlin's concern heightened as another organization also issued a warrant: The People's InterNational Kourt for Criminals of War (PINKCOW). PINKCOW, unlike the ICC, only has a few signatory nations, namely: Sealand, Sark, Bir Tawil, The Second Pirate Republic, the Kingdom of Prester John, the Coalition of 32.3 Plots of Land in Scotland from Established Titles, and the New California Republic. However, also unlike the ICC, the signatory nations have little to no international recognition and therefore do not let themselves be limited by such silly things as "international legal code" and "logistics of actually arresting the Russian president when he doesn't really leave the country and also controls the largest nuclear arsenal in the world". PINKCOW is only bound by the mortal coil which binds us all, and monetary restrictions resulting from their combined treasuries consisting solely of gold doubloons, bottlecaps, and like 18 quid. Nevertheless, they have committed to attempt to arrest Ol' Pouty Putin by whatever means necessary.

The Russian internal criminal investigatory agency, the SKR, is on high alert for any action taken by PINKCOW. PINKCOW is known for striking at dawn, using whatever disguises available to them, such as "Influencers", "Human Statue", or "Suspicious Salmon", and MacGyvering the shit out of any situation with nothing but a pencil, a yardstick, wire, elbow grease and a good old radioisotopic thermal generator. Putin better watch his back, because PINKCOW is coming for him.
