I Have an Article Completely Written but I Won't Tell You about sharing it with you. Why? Cause I don't feel like it. na na a boo boo you can't read it and won't ever read it.

That's right. I've made up my mind. You don't even have a chance now to read it. Imagine what I could have written about. Do it now. I bet you have so many creative and funny ideas of what the article could be about. But alas, you must be left alone in your own mind palace, attempting to assume the article that I have written. You'll never get to have the satisfaction and closure of knowing what I've written. I'm sitting here, fully satisfied with the article I've written. Fully satisfied with the knowledge of what the article that has Yeah you read that right. I won't tell you. I don't wanna tell you. It's quite the article too. It's got many jokes and some pretty good satire. Like this satire would be believed by many people it's so good, and that it's close to reality too. It's a usual Daily Bull Banger™. But guess what loser? I am not gonna share a single word out of the article with you. You know why? I don't think you would appreciate it. Ya know, I don't even know if you could understand the nuance and depth I put into that article, which I have written and have right here next to me as I write this.

Like where do I even begin with the article? Where do I even begin with you? Huh? Like seriously the more you keep pressing to read this really good and funny article the less and less I want to even think been written is all about. Fully satisfied with my tummy full of applesauce :)

Wanna try to guess the article some more? Go on. Guess. Try another time.

What's that? Could you think louder?

Oh no that's wrong. And that's wrong too, sorry. Looks like you are just not cut out for this temporal mind reading business. By the nature of those guesses, I gotta say I don't think there is any chance you guess it. And guess what? I'm still not gonna tell you what my article is about, an article that is written. And again, REALLY funny like wow! I was laughing just writing it and I can't imagine the reception it would get if published. But too bad, I don't wanna share it with you. Hmph!

Mattel Game Sales Skyrocket Around April Fools

The Pitted

Over this weekend, stock traders, economists, and the thousands of trading bots who generate most of the traffic and money on the exchanges have been closely following the share price of game company Mattel. When the Nasdaq closed last Friday, Mattel was experiencing an incredible spike— up 690% from the start of the week, and experts predict it will continue to rise for a few more days. This astronomical rise has been driven by an incredible increase in sales of their phenomenal games like He-man, Tappers of Grayskull, Lie Detector, and Boom-O. Retailers have commented that they have been running out of stock of some specific games, and have placed huge orders to try and keep up with demand.

Those who keep a keen eye on stocks might be aware that Mattel normally experiences a dip in stock price near the beginnings of April, and then have it rise up again towards the middle of the month. However, this year, amidst a recession, bank collapses, interest rate hikes, and a severe drop in the MUI, Mattel is seeming to deny economic doctrines as its stock price blasts wantonly into the upper stratosphere.

“This is an incredibly odd phenomenon,” One economist, Professor Laurence Tureaud from Pfeiffer University, commented. “Especially since no one knows why this spike is happening around April 1st.” Tureaud would continue to reference this consumer spike being similar to that for Crisco and other rationed goods before the Second World War, noting that it “implies people are buying not out of want, but need, or fear”. Whatever they could be fearing, and however Mattel games could protect them, remains a mystery.
