Eggnapping Culprit Arrested in Bunny Suit

DJ Benjamin

On Saturday night, authorities conducted a raid on a self-storage unit near Houghton, Michigan. They had been tracking leads for weeks, attempting to bust the ring behind the theft of thousands of eggs. Grocery store shelves have been left empty after break ins across the Upper Peninsula, with thousands of cartons of eggs being stolen in total before disappearing without an apparent trace. With Easter weekend fast approaching, authorities scrambled to recover the supply and find the poachers responsible for the operation. After the raid Saturday night, authorities were pleased to announce it had been a success.

"Thanks to the brave and dedicated people in our department, we were able to track down ringleaders and crack the case," Commissioner Frost announced in a press conference Easter morning, also mentioning that the eggs had been recovered and seized by the department under asset forfeiture laws. "Our staff's children will eat well today" he said with a smile.

Follow-up interviews and investigations into the story have revealed even more fascinating details about the bust. One hard-boiled officer who was one of the point men for the raid, Officer Klaus, gave some more details in an interview. "It sure wasn't over-easy, but we got it done," He asked to have put on the record. "We were on him so quickly we could see the whites of his eyes before he even knew what hit him." Proudly, between puffs a cigar, Klaus added "We fried that bunny bastard and broke this hole plot wide open."

The "bunny" that Officer Klaus referred to

was the main culprit, the head of the eggnapping ring and the only person present at the warehouse at the time of the raid. The as-of-yet unidentified man was found wearing a full, bright pink bunny suit and organizing the eggs into baskets when police arrived. According to investigators, when asked to identify himself, the suspect has so far only provided what appears to be a code name, "The Easter Bunny".

While the eggs have been recovered, police warn that the ring is probably much larger than just this. They have reasons to believe that the ring members have multiplied rapidly since the hatching of this plot, and even believe they might be operating through a shell company. The case remains open, but "The Easter Bunny" will terrorize eggs supplies no more.

Houghton Weather Skips 5th “Fools Spring,” Jumps Straight To Summer

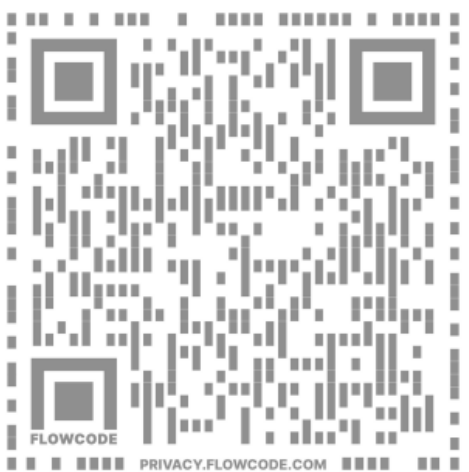

Big Sephiroth

After 6 of the worst months in all 19 of your miserable years on this planet, the weather on MTU campus has finally started to warm up for what most assume to be our fifth “fool’s spring” that precedes another harrowing snowstorm. However, it seems instead to be that case that summer in Houghton has begun about a month and a half early.

Meteorologists theorize that this is due to the severity of the snow/sleet/hail/rain storm last Wednesday. “It’s like a rubber band, the farther you pull it back, the farther it flings forward,” said a local weather reporter. “So when all that shitty winter weather pulled back the rubber band, it shot forward and right over spring and into summer. Think of it as the opposite of the oncoming nuclear winter where something really hot happens that plunges the world into a thousand year state of barren, desolate cold. Or something like that, I dunno, I’m not a meteorologist.”

As a consequence of this early summer, our reporters predict an influx of joy and whimsy around campus with a chance of childlike wonder. We can expect the sun to shine down warmly upon the leftover snow, creating puddles on the sidewalk for one to leap over on their walk to class, or perhaps just for the fun of it. Areas affected the most include Walker Lawn, where you may see students chilling in hammocks or playing that weird game with the ball and the trampoline, and Prince’s Point, where groups will surely resume bonfires and tentatively attempt to swim in the still-a-bit-too-cold water. Side effects of this weather may include a desire to grab that book you’ve been meaning to read and hunker down under the partial shade of a soon-to-be leaf-filled tree, the ability to wake up before 10 AM, and a general feeling that everything is going to be alright.
