6 Dead 8 Injured After Student Slurps Water During Class

Linden Ollie Gee

MTU campus was wracked with turmoil this past Tuesday after mass outrage erupted during a 2-hour long lecture. Reports claim the ruckus began when Aqua Mann, a third-year CFRES student, was caught loudly slurping water intermittently from their water bottle. The sounds of succulent slurping sent fellow CFRES student Trey Hugger into a frenzy, attacking nearby students and severely injuring a water fountain nearby. The slurping is said to have occurred for around 30 minutes before the attack, with 2-minute delays in between each slurp.

The attack occurred at roughly 9 AM, far too early for anyone to truly comprehend what was happening. Trey Hugger reportedly screamed, "I CAN'T TAKE THIS ANYMORE!" and flipped a desk while flailing wildly. Onlookers could only watch as Mr. Hugger thrashed in vain, whacking students repeatedly in the crowded lecture hall. Laptops went flying, papers were torn to shreds, and dignity was erased as the scene progressed. Some enterprising students attempted to salvage themselves by fashioning makeshift shields and spears from torn notebook pages. Authorities arrived on the scene and swiftly confiscated Aqua Mann's water bottle, presumably to investigate how the fuck you slurp that long without noticing you're being a bit of a dick.

Trey Hugger, the student who had initially snapped, was later found in a corner of the lecture hall, hyperventilating into a paper bag. When asked for a statement, Hugger mumbled something about being traumatized by the relentless hydration ambiance, vowing never to take a sip of water again. Trey was swiftly escorted to the hospital in Hancock for a psych evaluation and an IV drip line.

In the wake of this tragedy, administration has announced a new HASS course titled "Acoustic Etiquette (SS2635)," where students are taught the art of quietly sipping beverages without causing pandemonium. Support groups are also being offered for students traumatized by the outburst, going by the name "H2-Anonymous". This support group meets in Fisher 326 on Fridays at 6 pm.
