Bandwagon Overturns, Leaving Thousands Without Team to Latch Onto

Richard Petarius III

A terrible tragedy unfolded last weekend in downtown Las Vegas as a bandwagon carrying too many people overturned, leaving thousands without a team to cheer for. "We just wanted to love something, conditionally," says Sue Perth, a 46 year old mother of two. "I've been on this bandwagon for 3 weeks now, so I really felt like I could look down upon the newbies and root for the...umm...it's the Chiefs, right?"

Some fans are already looking ahead to next year. "A lot of work will have to be done in terms of rebuilding," remarks Dan Brady. "We just can't have the whole season lead up to this kind of disappointment." Brady has been a fan for 8 hours and, confused by all the red jerseys on Sunday, didn't notice that the Chiefs actually won the game.

He, like others, will be looking for a new team soon.

However, there aren't many places for these people to go in the near future. With the football season over, many will run blindly to a random basketball team, but they will once again have to go through the pain of being a fair-weather fan. "I've heard it all. None of it carries any weight," says Natalie Petarius who has been a fan since the beginning of this article. "They can say all they want. All I know is I'm gonna watch TV and ignore my two kids like I planned." For the record, Petarius has three children, including this reporter.

Many hundreds of fans were surprised to have even made it this far. "I thought the season was over 2 months ago," says Stacy Kelm who joined a fanclub last week. "I didn't know anything about the playoffs until I heard that Taylor's boyfriend was still doing his 'thing.'"

For others, the future looks a little brighter. "We'll keep our heads up, come back next year, and beat those damn Red Sox." Even though they may have the wrong sport, this community needs to find a way to come together if they want any chance of leeching onto another team in the middle of next season.
