Each week, the fillers you see here will go head to head to move on to the next round. The competition is based on the week to week gain in the "Bottles Saved" number, not the total number of bottles. Matches are chosen to be as competitive as possible.

MTU Can't Handle It

DJ Benjamin, Hazel Sprotitsy

MTU has a plague on its hands: Handles, handrails, and other hand-support technologies are falling left and right all over campus. It seems like every day yet another support has succumbed to the plight that hath gripped the land, and it's getting out of hand. Fisher's door handle was suspiciously AWOL for a handful of days. DOW elevator (pictured on left-hand side) had its back handrail manhandled from the pegs on the wall. The brand-spanking new HSTEM isn't even safe: the handrails are being held on with C-clamps and glue thanks to some clever handiwork to keep them from escaping the clutches of MTU students, with instructions that they are not to be touched before the glue dries and the handrail gets a grip.

After MTU campus lost its Unbreaking Enchantment on a bad hand at Vegas Night, Administration has insisted their hands are tied, while facilities has their hands full trying to keep handles on things. With the percent increase over previous years of hand-related incidents up 5 digits, fingers are being pointed every which way. Some claim the Hand Gremlins, elusive entities of MTU legally distinct from the printer elves, had a hand in the plot. Some point to heavy-handed students, though none have yet been caught red-handed. On the other hand, some blame Admin's "hands-off" approach. But no one has quite put a finger on what exactly is derailing handrails near and far. In the meantime, facilities is bringing on some extra hands to keep up. As the situation shakes out, the plight of the handles remains a touchy subject on campus.
