Cataclysm Strikes The Pep Band

The Anonymous Pep Bander

Tragedy! Disaster! Horror! Some other buzzwords! Calamity has struck the Pep Band, and the future of pep is dire! The year may have just started, but it already looks like the end of human history as we know it. On January 9th at approximately 9:22 PM, a member of the Pep Band was walking past the pep lounge (or the second floor lounge at the SDC for the uninitiated) when they beheld the terrible crime scene: the comfy couches had been moved from the lounge. They were so shocked at the gruesome scene they nearly passed out from freight, but managed to send a picture to the Huskies Pep Band Discord server, where chaos ensued. All were shocked at how mercilessly the couches were taken from the room. All that remained were a few extra tables, transforming the cool, awesome, and beautiful pep lounge into what looks like a boring cafe in a boring museum. With the removal of these couches, the Pep Band will no longer have anywhere to sit after a hard night of pepping at a three hour hockey game (as long as you ignore all the tables and chairs).

Those couches were historic features for the Pep Band. I hope that wherever these couches rest now, that they are resting peacefully in couch heaven. The craziest thing is that Green M&M once sat on one of those couches, and Tech still had the audacity to just remove them. I bet what actually happened is that the Woke Media is conspiring with Tech to censor the Pep Band. We bring high levels of energy to all the Tech events that we are at, but Tech can't have that. Tech wants the campus to become a place of "learning" and "research," which means there is no room for silly songs about beer. Tech must become bland and boring, and finally the syndicate has reached to the Pep Band to dismantle the organization from within.

Who knows what will happen to the Pep Band organization now? Personally, I cannot see a future where the band does not dissolve into chaos after fighting over the few remaining chairs. We may be looking at Pep Band civil war in the near future, and the results will be dire: football games will become even more boring, there will be nobody to point out that all games that the (now nonexistent) Pep Band does not win are obviously rigged, and only the Misfits will remain to sieve NMU. However, there remains hope. If you want to help save the pep lounge, and by extension the Pep Band as an organization, you can scan the QR code for a link to the Change.org petition to bring back the couches. If we can garner enough support, perhaps the future may still have some pep in it.

MTU Introduces a New Character: Dark Ben

DJ Benjamin: Benjamin Prime

In 1987, video game company Nintendo released the second game in their The Legend of Zelda franchise, Zelda II: The Adventure of Link. In it, the player is faced with an evil version of the eponymous protagonist, a dark-swapped sprite named "Dark Link". Thus began the Nintendo go-to strategy for creating a villain: simply color-swap the current protagonist and add "Evil" or "Dark" on the front.

37 years after "Dark Link", almost to the day (going off the Japanese release date), the boffins at Michigan Technological University decided to come up with their own opposite version of a somewhat (scarcely) known figure on campus, Ben of The Daily Bull. Information regarding this second Ben, or "Nega-Ben", is still forthcoming, and by forthcoming, I mean I'm not going to dox this poor man, so it's never coming. But Presumably, because the Daily Bull Benjamin is about as pale as a 5-gallon bucket, this Nega-Ben is [REDACTED]. Nonetheless, the confirmation that this is, in fact, a Nega-Ben, comes in the form of what group this new Ben is a part of: The MTU Lode.

While there are undoubtedly plenty of Bens on campus, they normally function somewhat like matter and antimatter: should they meet, their combined Benergy will create a hole in the fabric of spacetime and create ripples across the university. Thus, MTU has so far been sure to keep Bens pretty separate, with maybe only one or two in a class at a time, and ideally on opposite sides of the room. The position of Nega-Ben as an editor of the Lode likely was based on the assumption that the Lode and the Daily Bull were still sworn enemies, and thus the two unstoppable forces that are the Bens would never cross paths. They must have failed to read up on the Printer Elf War and the Great Lode of Bull Alliance, for now the two newspapers, and their editorial staffs, are chums.

Annihilation and space-time perturbations aside, MTU failed to reckon that unleashing two Bens on the campus journalism scene furthers an agenda much more secret, and much more powerful. Yes, I am discussing the Benjamin Conspiracy. Founded by Benjamin Franklin, the goal is to get Bens at the head of every journalistic outlet, starting small and local and spreading the power of the Bens, through accurate reporting and fair shitposting. The Bens will not stop until they can ensure that every journalistic source is outputting fair, unbiased, well-researched and prompt reporting, or on-time and witty satire. The Daily Bull was merely the test run, and now installing a Ben at the Lode is the first step towards world domination.

So prepare yourselves: In the near future, you'll be getting your news from sources like National Ben Corporation, the Ben Broadcast Company, the Associated Bens, the Benancial Times, Beuters, and BenPR. All sources of quality journalism will be under the control of the Bens; FOX, The Daily Mail, and Breitbart should be largely unaffected.
