Tú Taco Mysteriously Closed

Baffled Onlooker

For MTU students or faculty who live off campus and have escaped the monopoly racket that is the dining plans for the dining halls, food options on campus during the day are limited to basically two options: the basement of the MUB, and Velodrome coffee in the library. For the over-price of a latte at Velodrome, you can instead buy three chicken tenders, or an order of cheese curds, from the MUB. Or, even better, a person can instead get a decent quesadilla or a few street tacos from Tú Taco, the best (and only) tacos that Chartwells has to offer, a fact that is definitely true and not something you should check.

However, to the dismay of Huskies the world over, Tú Taco mysteriously closed on Tuesday, and remained closed through Wednesday. No reason has been given, and Chartwells has not been asked for comment. The other side of the kitchen, Breakfast & Co., remains operational and largely unaffected.

Rumors as to the reason for this closure have abounded amidst the wailing and gnashing of teeth of students who would really have liked to get some veggies with their ~$7.00 meal rather than just chicken tendies or a burger. One theory is that the supply chain of corn tortillas was disrupted in the wake of the US presidential election, with Gruma, the world's leading corn tortilla manufacturer, quietly diverting exports to the United States in preparation for new tariffs. Another theory claims that the stovetops were shut down after an inspection revealed a faulty flux-oscillation regulator. Still another theory alleges that this is part of a rebranding scheme, with Tú Taco needing to remove the accent above their "u" to restore equilibrium for the correct amount of accented letters at food vending locations on Michigan Tech Campus, as currently MTU is one accent above their quota.

No timeline has yet been given for Tú Taco's reopening, though it has only been two days. Until it does reopen, Huskies will be left to weep and lament as they are forced to either buy fried foods, sign over their firstborn for a nice latte to boost morale in exam season, or go hungry. But they can take comfort in knowing that, whichever option they choose, any of those is better than relying on Dining Hall food.
