The Onion Acquires Infowars

DJ Benjamin

A massive real news story broke in the world of satire news yesterday. The Onion, America's most famous satire news media company, has just announced that they have acquired Infowars in a bankruptcy auction. Infowars, the much-memed show devoted entirely to spreading harmful and baseless conspiracy theories solely for attention, was previously owned and run by widely-known fuckwad Alex Jones. But as part of the consequences for his own actions, numbnuts Jones' assets were being auctioned off, and The Onion saw the opportunity to buy it because it would be "hilarious" and a joke "at [Jones'] expense". There may be an adage in comedy that you shouldn't "punch down", but dimwit Jones may present the one exception where it's both cathartic and entirely acceptable to punch while he's down.

There's a certain cosmic justice being handed down with this turn of events. Cartoonishly evil chucklefuck Alex Jones, who built a well-known media brand by profiteering off of 20 dead children (and 6 adults) while being extremely pro-the-thing-that-killed-those-children and calling their grieving families hacks and frauds in order to attract an audience who would buy dubious health supplements, now gets to watch it all crumble as he's saddled with $1.4 billion in debt to those grieving families. A consequence of his free speech that was entirely his fault. Even better, The Onion has announced plans to convert Infowars into a website that's ironically a more reliable news source devoted to satire both mocking conspiracy-vomitting internet personalities like dipshit Alex Jones and promoting an end to gun violence, partnering with Everytown for Gun Safety. While it is doubtless that this acquisition would not have happened without the hard work by a lot of people, and incredible courage and fortitude by the families of the victims of Sandy Hook to bring Jones to court and see it through, news like this is what can make one believe in divine justice

In addition to the website, The Onion bought all of the assets of Infowars, including the health supplements and intellectual property. It remains to be seen whether or not The Onion will cease the sale of the health supplements entirely or instead take the opportunity to do something really funny, such as replacing them all with onion powder and changing the packaging slightly. Unlike the IP of Infowars, which The Onion had to pay an as-of-yet undisclosed amount for, they can have that idea for free.

Daily Bull Quarterly Review

DJ Benjamin

Sources near to The Daily Bull recently revealed some details of the organization's financial standing, with permission from the organization leadership. It appears that, like the rest of the economy, The Daily Bull saw great prosperity in the third quarter, with an [NaN] % increase in revenue and a surge of new members. This news, along with The Onion's recent acquisition of some shitty conspiracy show, has caused the FUCKDAMN index to skyrocket. The FUCKDAMN index tracks the performance of a variety of satire media groups, including those that don't actually make any profit (such as The Daily Bull) and aren't actually publicly traded (such as both The Onion and The Daily Bull).

For the most part, the released information isn't too exciting. There's a lot of boring book balancing, minor liabilities like "$19 trillion– Puppy Bowl stakes" and the standard revenue sources like "$19.00000000000004—Puppy Bowl winnings", yadda yadda yadda, but the point is that the Bull is firmly in the black. Some notable non-liquid assets are also listed, such as "El Presidente", "https://dailybull.students.mtu.edu", "The ghost of Douglas Houghton himself", "Amogus", "Horns", "The Lode's love and affection" and "Brad", though the released list is incomplete.

While the current bullish market is good for a lot of organizations, The Daily Bull benefits the most directly. It's in the name after all. With anticipated December cuts from the Fed coming soon, to help boost consumer spending during the holiday season, The Bull expects to carry into a strong fourth quarter. Economists and corporations alike are anticipating a lot of uncertainty for the year 2024, and The Bull has floated the idea, for no particular reason at all, of trying to get Canada to annex the UP, or maybe just the Keweenaw peninsula and Houghton County.
