BREAKING: Daily Bull Buys The Lode

The Bull Himself

This past Wednesday, a significant advancement in journalism history has been achieved as The Daily Bull has purchased The Lode in a private auction. The total amount has not yet been announced, though according to inside sources, the total price was upwards of one dollar. The auction follows a series of accusations thrown at the Bull regarding spreading false information.

This announcement comes as a shock to the Houghton Community as, as far as anyone else knew, The Lode was not for sale. This was not a sufficient deterrent for The Bull though, as The Bull simply took matters into their own hands and posted The Lode for sale anyways. This decision is reportedly part of an ongoing effort to make The Daily Bull more newsworthy, trustworthy, purgatory, and less inflammatory. Some efforts are being made to reverse this decision, but when asked to elaborate on the situation, The Bull Himself simply said "nuh uh".

The Bull elaborated on the details of this purchase on X The Everything App Formally Known As Twitter. "Because we have acquired the entirety of The Lode, this also means that we have acquired their printing press and their fancy little newspaper stands. We aim to utilize these resources effectively in improving our own newspapers." The Bull provided a crayon drawing of the new paper layout along with the xeet. "Together as one, finally married and joined in matrimony, as it truly should be."

The Lode has yet to respond to this matter, likely because they are too busy being overwhelmed and paralyzed by the love and affection they feel for The Bull's decision. Dedicated readers should start to see some upgraded articles relatively soon, with both newspapers combining underneath the new name: The Lode Of Bull.
