State Farm Not a Good Neighbor After All

By Liz Fujita ~ Daily Bull

OKLAHOMA CITY, OK – Residents of an Oklahoma City suburb began raising complaints last week after months of impatience with their local State Farm agency. The branch, which opened in late May, has done nothing but aggravate households since it opened.

"We just can't handle this anymore," noted a distraught Michaela Brewer. "This is the fourth time this week I've found trash from their parties in my lawn."

Trouble started for Brewer when State Farm celebrated its grand opening with a 4-barrel kegger on the red roof of their building. Several elderly women complained about the noise – when police arrived, however, the representatives merely threatened to revoke department insurance and threw Labatt at the cars.

Image of Purple Vest Guy Stalks School

By Jon "Big-O" Mahan ~ Daily Bull

An image of the infamous purple vest guy has begun to stalk the school as of late. It's not being called a ghost, since nobody can ascertain if he is indeed dead – however, it is a projection, at the very least. Officials are uncertain as to why the image is stalking the school, but they know one thing. They must get rid of it!

For those of you unaware, purple vest guy was a preacher who would appear on campus a few years back. He was extremely conservative, and would yell at people for even the most obscure 'sins' that were listed in his 'holy book.' If a man had his hair too long (1/6 of an inch), then he would yell that you were going to burn in hell. Holding hands while walking down the sidewalk with your significant other? He'd yell that the woman (or women) was a harlot or whore.

A very angry man indeed.

And fable tells us that one legendary brave man actually drew a satanic circle right next to him. Many people give him strange looks, props, and mad kudos.

As for purple vest guy, after a year hiatus ...see ZOMG Gengar on back Authorities inform us that 'Purple Vest Ghost' may look something like this. Do not make eye contact lest he Dream-eat your dreams of wearing short skirts and sleeping in late!

Following Michigan Tech's example, I inform you that this box is for funnies. Cross streets when traffic breaks.

Several weeks later, it was reported that the agency had a Bring-Your-Child-to-Work Day, during which the tired employees asked Brewer and her neighbors to watch the kids for them. Not wanting to be trod on and made to babysit, people began complaining publicly.

I wonder how Flo the Progressive Girl will capitalize on this. Probably with something quirky and AMAZING.

“The irresponsibility of these insurance people is just phenomenal,” Brewer added. “They sell fire insurance, but I saw one of the agent toss a lit cigarette butt into a big dry bush!”

State Farm’s backyard neighbors, a

Jiffy Lube, have expressed their discontent with several Farmers continually attacking cars with baseball bats to draw more potential customers to want auto insurance. Security cameras showed this happening at least three times in the month of June; one incident even included smashing two cars together, demolition derby style, and blaming it on poor driving by mechanics.

When asked about the source of these concerns, a State Farm representative revealed only that company policies are confidential. After some prying, it was discovered that there is a Hypocrisy Clause in most agreements, allowing the insurers to be as unsafe “as they damn well please.”

Allstate, meanwhile, has taken State Farm’s tomfoolery as an opportunity for heavy self-promotion. The soothing voice of 24’s David Palmer urges people: “With some insurance agencies, you never know what loud hip-hop you’ll hear at night, or whether your basement will spontaneously flood itself. With Allstate, the only thing you need to know is that we will be there for you when State Farm ruins the day. Are you in good hands?”

The Geico Gecko declined comment, saying only that if they redo the State Farm jingle, he should be invited to read it as Britishly as possible. 🐸 and being kicked off of the campus, it seems that he has found some way to astral-project himself. In all seriousness, the mad preacher is continuing his work, from afar. As his image stalks the school grounds preaching about hate and burning in hell, and how we're all damned, he probably sits comfy cozy in his house, likely air conditioned, sipping a nice cup of Irish coffee. Lucky bastard!

The authorities have yet to get to the bottom of this issue, though the occult club here on campus seems to be making grounds. Several of them have begun to astral project themselves across campus to harass and harangue the purple vest guy, safe from his damning words as they likely play Starcraft. There has even been a report of a full-scale ghost fight breaking out between the members and purple vest guy. Spectators comment that the fight was extremely boring, as fists couldn't connect, no matter what each party did. Still, others say it was awesome because hey, ghost fight! Am I right? Yes.

What becomes of this ghostly tale of ghostly proportions is yet to be seen, but it can be said that if astral projection takes on here at Tech, nobody will show up to class. Indeed, this school will become a ghost campus. Of course, CS majors don't come out of their rooms anyway... 🐸
