Golf: Not Quite So Boring As Sir Lancelot

By Cameron Long ~ Daily Bull

Quick question: what is California best-known for? Shut up, I'll tell you. Fires, of course! [Big O confirms this] They're in the news all the time, burning houses and boiling lakes. A golfer in Irvine recently landed his tee shot in the rough. His next swing caused perhaps the most ridiculous forest fire ever when the club head sparked against a rock. True story.

According to the general manager of the course, the resulting 25-acre fire was bad, but even more damage was done by the 38 fire trucks that came to party. "I've never responded to that call before," said Captain Greg McKeown.

There has also been no word on the golfer's final score.

Google Later, the New Face of Online Search Engines.

By Kyle Roe ~ Daily Bull

September 14th, 2010 – The world of online searching has changed forever today as Google, provider of the leading search engine "Google", unveiled "Google Later" their newest addition to their internet searching powerhouse. "After ten years of hard work, with millions of dollars spent, we finally feel that we have risen above all expectations and created something that will truly make the Google name." said Dana Lengeek, lead supervisor of Google's development team, "Why?

Just when you thought it couldn't get any better - it didn't.

Because Google Later brings the users what they need, when they need it most."

"Google Later works under one simple concept," said Dana. "We take the user's searches, and give them exactly what they are looking for the moment they need it. No longer will the user be bogged down by the searches they want - Google Later only gives them what they need. Often the user will not actually need what they are searching for when they hit Enter. This is when the wonders of Google Later kick in. Waiting to give the user their results later is what Google Later does best. Our research has shown that people who immediately get what they search for soon forget about that search. People who are made to wait to get what they want feel a stronger need, and a more emotional connection, as they sit their staring at a slowly spinning loading icon."

could be found everywhere today as the new service was released to the public. "Why get it now when you can get it Later?" and "Why should I wait for my search results? Why not!" were some of the slogans Google boasted to help bring new audiences to their growing user base.

And bring in new users it did; during the first four hours after Google changed

Freshman Dies of Soft Serve Overdose

by Alec Hamer – Daily Bull

As anyone who has ever lived in, and eaten at, a Michigan Tech residence hall can tell you, yes, there is a soft serve machine in the dining hall and yes, it is all you can eat. Although soft serve is of questionable ice cream origins no one can deny having ever over-eaten it. I mean, it's ice cream... in potentially extreme portions.

Who hasn't seen "that one kid" fill up a bowl or a perpetually dirty McNair cup with the stuff? It's nearly universal; everyone will eat shitty ice cream if it's free. That's why I had little to no remorse when I heard a freshman died from eating too much of it.

"He sat there eating soft serve for, like, 3 hours" according to Tim Steeves, a local soft serve aficionado. "Where did it all go?"

Now doesn't that look tasty? It's so huge! So twisty! So heartattackey!

No one is quite sure. What is known is the approximate amount consumed.

According to the autopsy report over 3 and a half gallons were consumed before death and then another half gallon was consumed post-mortem.

According to the pathologist who carried out the exam a death like this has never been witnessed by the medical community before. "Holy Shit... look at the boy! He consumed until death and then ate some more." He added, "How is this possible?! I guess zombies like ice cream too." No one can argue with that.

In all my two years in the residence halls, I've never seen anything like this before, though I could see it happening if the right stars were aligned or some shit like that. Most likely he was just a CS major that lost a bet. In either case it was only a matter of time before it happened. 🤔 their search engine to Google Later, over five hundred million connections to the homepage were reported. Most of them stayed connected to the homepage for an average of two hours, while Later waited to give them their search results. "At first I doubted Google Later - why would I want to wait even longer?" remarked John H. Bunz, a retired car salesman. "But after trying Google Later, and getting quite worked up over how long it took to give me results, I found that it gave me more time for planning my funeral."

Google remains optimistic with their new product. No more instantly getting thousands of results that you will most likely never need; instead get exactly what you need, after more time when you have an actual need for it.

Due to the predicted success of Google Later, supervisor Dana Lengkeek guaranteed that Google would soon release even more revolutionary new ways to search. Including "Google Denied", where you are given the exact opposite of what you search. "Denied would help improve surfing the web, imagine what you could get if you searched "safe innocent fun";" Lengkeek said, "with Google, there is nothing that can't be done." 🤖

The best part, though, is that according to the USGA's Rule 23, the golfer could have removed debris (including stones, leaves, and branches) from near the ball.

In related news, the golfer will not be charged with a crime.

In unrelated news, famed Bushwood Country Club groundskeeper Bill

Murray has claimed to have finally bumped off that pesky gopher.

In completely unrelated news, top military officials have been left puzzled at the theft of two tons of plastic explosives, six dozen grenades, four grenade launchers, 2 RPGs, 3 60mm mortars, a Browning machine gun, and a flamethrower from a local armory. 🦘
