Big City Observations: Fashion

Brought to you by

Nathan "Invincible" Miller

Since moving to the city, I've noticed a major difference in the fashion sense when compared to the countryside. Both students and locals alike all seem to know how to dress well, leaving me, the t-shirt wearing grad-student, two choices: fork over my life savings to buy fancy hipster clothes, or hope that I get on What Not to Wear. Or, you know, join a nudist camp and give up on clothes altogether.

Nearly everywhere I look, people are wearing multi-piece outfits with all the fixings: undershirt, t-shirt, over shirt, stylish jacket, designer jeans, bedazzled belt, Kashmir wool socks, 5-speed automatic shoes, and those fancy glasses they sell for hundreds of dollars at the mall. Me? Shorts I've had for way too long, a t-shirt I probably got from Woot or for free, and sandals. About the same as when I was five.

End of Zombie Horde?

By Sam Schall ~ Daily Bull

Flying high over the leftovers of what was once the grand college campus, the 7 survivors of the zombie outbreaks breathe easily. They discuss what happened to them over the past week.

On Monday, the outbreak started, many students were oblivious and only a few zombies roamed campus as a slightly larger handful of aware humans were starting to fight them off.

Tuesday, 80 humans fought off the zombies and, by nightfall, only 25 zombies roamed campus.

This included the count after the aware humans ran a mission across campus to retrieve food rations stored there and avoided the seemingly hiding zombies

Wednesday brought more numbers into to the aware humans to fight off the zombies, but that also meant more targets for the zombies to eat. And by the end of the day, 45 zombies were among the 119 aware (and had been alive) people on campus. We all mourned the loss of our comrades.

Thursday sunset brought the end to a normal day of running away from zombies and protecting each other. It was

She wants to eat you, but not in the way you want...

post-sunset that brought the danger. During the day, humans and zombies heard about a drop for a cure for the zombie virus. It happened that evening, and the humans ran into to defend the precious package.

Even after some loses to the zombies, 11 humans were able to defend the package long enough for it to be opened and the cure retrieved. They quickly fled the area after the zombies slowly dispersed, seemingly afraid of the cure that these humans held.

Salvation for the survivors came on Friday. The aware humans just had to get

... OMNOMNOM from front to a helicopter point during a specific time span to be picked up and rescued from the zombie infected area. The rescue copters left the area at 3:00pm that day, only being able to pick up 7 humans, these humans watching other valiantly trying to get to the spot only to be taken down by the zombie foes.

So, only 7 humans survived while the rest of the campus is presumed to have been zombified and starved after the human population is entirely eaten or otherwise. The survivors wish to spread the word about this battle so, when it happens again, more people can save themselves. If you're interested in fighting off the zombie infected, email fcswanso@mtu.edu or go to 235 DHH. He'll arm you with knowledge for this battle.

So, as I rest and hide, I hope everyone gets ready for another inevitable zombie infection. Good luck and I hope you all survive. 🍄

BBC uses to many 'apostrophes'.

By Jon "Big-O" Mahan ~ Daily Bull

This morning a bunch of 'Germans' were driving through a 'tunnel.' Upon getting to the end of the 'tunnel' they found themselves in an 'accident.' This of course caused an 'outrage' among their 'countrymen.' Many 'people' soon found themselves in the middle of a 'conflict.'

According to the 'officials' there was a minor 'fault' in the engine of the 'German's' car. This 'fault', as it were, had something to do with the 'engine' and the 'fuel intake.' Nobody is sure what they 'mean' by all of this, but what they do know is that there is much 'speculation' as to exactly how this could have 'happened.'

One 'party' agrees that this was the work of 'sabotage.' Stating various 'sources,' they seem to point that 'some parties' have seen it to be 'beneficial' to remove these 'Germans' from their 'seat.' The 'identity' of the 'Germans' in question has not been 'confirmed' but many suspect them to be 'high ranking officials.' According to the 'BBC' this 'possibility' 'may or may not be true'.

The 'counter' to the previous 'train of thought' is that the entire 'accident' was just that. An 'accident.' They point to the 'innebriation' of the driver and the 'handling' of the car as well as 'skid marks' on the road that 'point' to the 'consensus' among these 'parties' that the 'accident' was 'induced' by 'alcohol.' Nobody is sure how much the 'driver' had 'consumed' before he 'drove' the 'car,' but it is 'known' that he had a 'habit' of 'drinking' 'too much' 'Everclear.' This 'problem' has been 'addressed' by the 'company' but 'he' has 'never' been 'punished' by 'his' 'superiors.' 'More' on 'this' 'story' 'later'. 🍄

The 'driver' just 'minutes' before the 'accident'

Sure, I'll be the one laughing when a truck splashes us with mud, but in the meantime I feel outclassed. After all, everybody cool who ever lived in the movies had good fashion sense. And TV. And cartoons. Heck, their clothes were so stylish that that's all they wore. Which is exactly what I need – a closet full of exactly the same cool outfit.

But alas, I'm too lazy to build myself a fancy wardrobe / portal to another land. A guy I know here went all the way to NYC to get a pair of jeans he likes. If I had gone on that same trek for jeans, the first time I'd wear them I'd rip a big hole in them. Karma is not kind to expensive things, lemme tell ya.

The worst part about fashion in the city is that even the slobs are all right. Whereas in the Houghton Wal-Mart you expect to see the ugliest people on the planet, the people here are almost passable for regular human beings. I mean, even the homeless aren't so bad. Do I walk around wearing a suit with a feather in my hat? Definitely beats the carharts and camouflage hunting gear that the inbreds of rural towns wear.

In the grand scheme of things, what I ought to do is start my own style. That way I'd be ahead of the game and make a bazillion dollars selling it off to a bandwagon bandits. Just look at silly bands. Whoever thought to sell worthless rubber bands to kids could probably buy out a small country by now. All I have to do is turn some thing mundane into an exciting addition to anyone's attire. How about... meat!

Bacon clothing? Whats next, beef curtains? tomatoed

Unfortunately for me, I'm not about to parade around wearing cold cuts on my head, so I guess I won't be rolling in the dough just yet. So until I can think up my own style, it looks like I'll be playing catch up for a while. Maybe in the meantime I'll ask the hobo who raids my dumpster for tips on how to look chic... 🍄
