It's that time again! More sports updates about the teams you may care about!

In Tech athletics, the Rugby team got its first ever win, a 40-8 romp against Wisconsin-Blacks. Jack Lubinski scored twice, while myriad other players also found the goal for the Huskies. The match was held in the pouring rain; that is, the pouring rain of tears from the Wisconsin-Blacks' eyes as the Ruggerers not only sent 5 of them to the hospital, but also ran off with their girlfriends and even a few of their mothers. One of them, wearing shorts that ironically read, "Seek and Destroy," was so brutalized that he ran home halfway through the game, complaining that "those mean people hurt me, boo hoo!" Logan Mahowald, the "Man of the Match," was asked about how he was so unstoppable during the game. His reply: "You don't know who ...see Tech victory on back

Fearsome Fighter Found Frolicking

In the dead silence of the night, a black and white-clad figure stalks the halls of the SDC, brutalizing anyone in its path. Cries of pain can be heard echoing off the walls, tormenting those who hear them. With three confirmed fatalities already, it was time to investigate these ghoulish goings-on.

I started by scanning the Lode for news, then quickly realized it was a futile attempt and tried elsewhere. I managed to run across one of the survivors on their way to Counseling Services and was able to pry some information out of him. Zach Simpson, a shy, compact Tech employee (formerly of the Pep Band) retold his encounter with the being who he says "was something straight out of hell."

"I was walking back with my pal Mike from the Pistol range when suddenly we heard strange noises coming from upstairs. We went up to investigate and then we saw it: a figure in some strange robes, posing majestically over the crumpled form of some unlucky person. We turned to run but it was too late; she was upon us. I threw a punch and ended up flat on my back, the wind knocked out of me. Mike tried to grapple with it, but it flung him into the wall. I heard some of his bones snap with one of those sounds like when you eat a Kit-Kat. I pulled out my pistol, hoping to down the beast. I pulled the trigger 5, 6 times, but the thing was deflecting my bullets with a sweep of the arm! I knew I was probably a goner, but Mike somehow managed to get to his feet and tackled it from behind." He began weeping. "Then it easily picked him up and threw him through the doors, all the way down to the swimming pool! Poor Mike drowned before he had a chance to regain consciousness."

Clearly this figure posed a significant threat to late-night patrons of the SDC and had to be stopped. While searching for help, I was contacted by the WWE of all people. They had heard rumors of a super-fighter here at Tech and were interested in seeing for themselves. They sent hardcore legend Mick Foley to assist me in finding and capturing the beast. If anyone could survive a fight with a hard-throwing monster, it was Foley.

Later that night, we met near the ticket office and began to plan, after commenting on each other's incredibly study beards, both of which are incredibly full and exquisite. We began stalking the second floor, loudly proclaiming that nothing in the world could hurt us. Then, out from behind a door, came the figure, still clothed in the black and white robes.

It went straight for the hardcore legend, but Foley was faster than he looked, pulling out a steel chair and smashing the beast over the head. Unfazed, it proceeded to throw him down the hall where he landed with a painful-sounding "thud." The chair had knocked part of the robes loose however and I thought I noticed some long, blond hair. That is right before I was being pummeled. Foley came to my aid, dropping the atomic elbow from out of nowhere. The creature shrieked and flew at him, busting him wide open. I did what I could, grabbing the chair and hitting the beast again and again, finally fazing the figure long enough for us to run back to the lobby, nursing our wounds. We had had enough.

The WWE gave up their attempt to find a new fighter, and I gave up trying to find out who the person was. That was, until I met the culprit and recognized that blond hair. All of this story happened because Olivia Zajac is really good at Aikido. 🐉

... Tech victory from front

I am? I'm the JUGGERNAUT BITCH!" After the victory, the team managed to burn down half of Wisconsin during the celebration, which lasted until three days from now.

In other tech sports, the men's football team, not wanting to be completely outdone by the rugby team, obliterated Northwood in setting a new scoring record, 62-30. Tech had NINE touchdowns by various players, led by an astonishing 277 yards and five touchdowns by star running back Phil Milbrath. Pizza was going to be 90% off, but Dominos realized the resulting rush would not only cause casualties, it might put them out of business, so it only gave the now-standard 50% off. What a ripoff. The Tech women's soccer team has lost 4 straight, having gone stone cold in getting goals. I know what happened. Since the Tech hockey team hasn't been known to score many goals, some of our girls sacrificed their talent to give the hockey team an edge; it's worked, but at the expense of the soccer team. The team expects to finish the inaugural season strongly however.

In NFL action, Cleveland and Oakland were upset winners over New Orleans and Denver, respectively. The CheatPatriots continue to roll, as do the Steelers. Chicago, finally playing at the level they're good at, fell again, this time to Washington, 17-14. And, in a match that would have been better off if a meteor hit the stadium, Favre and the Vikings lost a close one to the Packers in a battle of who could make more mistakes. Favre, always the competitor, had to one-up the Packers and seal the deal with an interception returned for a touchdown. The Lions and my Jets both had bye weeks, which is good for the Lions because they'll get Stafford back, finally. Next week's game against the Redskins should show how much mettle this team really has. Also, the NFL is looking to fine people for helmet-to-helmet hits now. Crazy! Baseball: The World Series is set, with the upstart Texas Rangers taking out the Yanks and the Giants surprising the Phillies. The Rangers have never made the big show, while the Giants haven't won it since moving from Brooklyn centuries ago. Should be a good series with good hitters and some outstanding pitchers on both teams. Also, the Tigers have resigned 3B Brandon Inge to a 2-yr, $11.5 million dollar deal. Good to know he'll be in the "D" for awhile longer. Moving to the NBA...stuff. Preseason is over, the Heat look mortal, and Allen Iverson is going to play in Turkey because they haven't figured out how much of a locker-room cancer he is. Enjoy Constantinople Istanbul AI! HOCKEY HOCKEY HOCKEY. NHL action is going strong, and the Red Wings find themselves near the top of the Western Conference with a 5-1-1 record. The usual suspects are contributing, as is Todd Bertuzzi, surprisingly. Mike Modano needs to step it up though, he's at a -6 rating and his line is struggling. The Blackhawks are staying afloat with a 5-4-1 record; not bad considering the turnover this off-season. Also, the NHL is handing out suspensions and/or fines for most head hits nowadays, which is leading to some serious questions about the league's office and policies. PS: Brock Lesnar was upset by Cain Velasquez at UFC 121, getting beat down and knocked out in the first round. 🐉
