Do you like Americans?

By Jodhbir Singh ~ Daily Bull

Indians are very shy at showing their feelings. We don't say easily if we like something or not. However, Americans are blunt about their feelings. 'I don't like it.' I have heard this sentence numerous times, mainly from a blonde's side. "What the fuuk you like on this earth, my dihk" I heard once my American friend angrily replying to his blonde girlfriend.

Stuff has to be very good before an Indian likes it. Americans, on the other hand, easily admit it if they like it. "I like your boobs," a comment John gave to that blonde. She had a nice smile which gave me a big relief that she took it as a complement. I can't imagine how an Indian girl would react to it. A slap on the face won't be enough - probably I would dead. Why? Dude come on, we don't say things like this in India. Well, not because we don't like boobs. It just

The Hazardous Chemtini

By Olivia Zajac ~ Daily Bull

Early labs strike fear in the heart of all students; they always drag on and are too complicated for sleepy brain cells to comprehend. When left without supervision, thoughts will wander during a long, tedious lab. This was the situation when the Chemtini came to be.

This particular creation can be credited to physical chemistry lab and determining molar volume of everyone's favorite chemical: ethanol. It turns out the amount of ethanol being used was 200 proof. It was determined that 2 shots of this amount of ethanol is equivalent to about 4 shots of whisky (or whiskey). After running multiple boring trials on who-knows-what, the Chemtini was born. It is a mixture of ethanol, water, and a few other key ingredients that will not be revealed.

Mmm...A delicious martini. OF CHEMICALS. Nothing says good morning like ETHANOL.

It turns out there are a few ways of enjoying a Chemtini; drinking, absorption, or direct injection. The first is the most enjoyable, as a Chemtini was developed to have a pleasant taste and as little nasty aftertaste as possible. It is best prepared in large vats, and then served out in separate 250ml Erlenmeyer flasks. Adding a colorful umbrella is optional.

Personally, after drinking a few too many Chemtini's, the most out of the ordinary activities took place. I started to stalk random male students in the ChemSci, and managed to corner one and was overheard saying "I've had one too many Chemtini's. I need to make bad decisions!" Highly

... Like um, like... from front doesn't work in India.

If you are an Indian, then count the number of times an American uses the word 'Like' in the next 10 minutes of his/her conversation. If you are an American, get your fucking TI-89 calculator to add your likes. The highest I have counted is roughly 38 times in 10 minutes in a group of three Americans and me.

"I don't know if I like you, but you are like the other guy who, like other guys, stares at me like I am some kind of likable lollypop. I just feel like I should not like you. Now how do I make you stop liking me?" "know1" said. This is just an exaggerated example by "some1" who overheard "know1," both Americans.

The very nature of Americans to express their feelings, and excessive use of the words like 'Like' to express their likes, have given a new feature to the world of internet. It was on Facebook and now I find it on YouTube and pretty much on every website-Like this item. Initially, I was hesitant (because we don't do it in India) but finally clicked the 'Like' on her picture on Facebook just to complete 100 likes, and yes, to also show my feelings.

If you like this article, then 'Like' Daily Bull on Facebook and tell them that you liked my article.

Earlier this very day, several _____ (pl N) clashed in front of a train carrying a _____ (n) from _____ (country) to _____ (country2). The _____ (pl N) were angry about the use of _____ (n2) in their home country. They say they were from an organization called _____ (organization) and that they sought to rid the world of _____ (something bad). The issue has been hotly debated for some time, and came to a head this past _____ (day of week). Unfortunately, the _____ (pl n) were too busy protesting, and didn't see the train. The operator was _____ (feeling) and was unable to stop the train in time. All of the _____ (pl N) died in the accident. It was _____ (adj).

... C2H5OH from front inappropriate and disturbing events took place then, so I've been told. I neither remember, nor care to recall what happened due to Chemtini overdosing.

Absorption was experimented with by one of the group members, Caleb. He enjoys the cool sensation of ethanol drying on the skin, and wondered what would happen if one was to soak in a full tub of this wonderful Chemtini. Unfortunately, it turns out that one would die from long, full body exposure to such a potent potion. After performing some independent research, Caleb discovered that soaking a hand in a bowlful of Chemtini for a few minutes is enough to keep you inebriated for an entire evening (6-12 hours varying by body weight). A single hand for upwards of 20 minutes covers a weekend of Senior Barrels, and two hands for 10-20 minutes will keep your speech slurred and actions out of control for Winter Carnival.

Direct injection is the least awesome way to enjoy a Chemtini; it enters the blood stream immediately and then results in getting extremely drunk in a matter of minutes. This is not an encouraged method since it becomes hard to control the amount of Chemtini that enters your system. Group member Pete was unfortunately hospitalized after volunteering to test this method. Needless to say, someone somewhere has got to take the blame.

That person would have to be Martha. Martha is not actually a girl; he is a member who does the cleaning and admits to dressing too fashionably for a straight man. He is otherwise known as Bobby. Bobby is the one to thank for this amazing, dangerous concoction. His time spent in his fraternity has taught him to seek out new and exciting ways to get shitfaced, and faster. It was in this dreadfully boring 8am lab that he gave birth to the Chemtini.

So next time you go out and feel like trying something new, go for the Chemtini, and make sure to thank Caleb, Pete, Bobby and myself for the most amazing night you'll never remember. But Facebook and possibly the whole internet will.
