Black & Blue Friday

By Alec Hamer ~ Daily Bull

As you all know, Turkey Day is fast approaching. The most American of holidays, Thanksgiving, will be here November 25th! I'm so excited! Think of all the food! Unfortunately, Thanksgiving also gives us the day that follows; Black Friday. OH THE HUMANITY!!

Why have a day where people literally get killed at Best Buy for being in line? Is that a new flat screen TV at a horrendously low price? GET OUT OF MY WAY.. IT'S MINE!

It's not that I don't love capitalism because trust me, I do. It's just why have a day that's designed to be a cluster-fuck? I've been to Mall of America on Black Friday. I've also been to an "early bird special." All I can say is wow. I don't why they call it Black Friday. It should really be called Black and Blue Friday.

I've seen it all. Grandmas

Bad News

By Bill Melcher ~ Daily Bull

Scientists made a shocking discovery just a few hours ago. Time in the Upper Peninsula has undergone a never-before-seen mutation. In early September, Lake Superior underwent an abnormal warming phase, causing a new fault line to form from Thunder Bay, ON, to Muskegon, MI. Such a phenomenon in turn caused the Keeweenaw along with surrounding atmosphere to rise above the earth and eventually fling off at a tangential velocity of approximately the speed of intergalactic smell. We entered an orbit around the sun just short of Mars by October, and conditions were just perfect enough that the only significant changes in everyday life were shortening of the days and a cold front. However, we now orbit the sun approximately 5,684 times per earth-day, and therefore time has slowed significantly on our new "planet". Time passes much slower here than it does on the earth we knew. On our home world, it's now the year 2113, a hundred years after I was supposed to graduate, but on planet Keeweenaw we haven't even finished a semester yet.

"Dude, I totally knew this semester was taking forevvvvurrrrr..." comments one Tech student when asked to comment on our situation. When asked how this will affect plans he had for the is why I'm declaring that this nation install a boxing ring in each town. Now, the fight can be taken out of the store and into the ring. People will no longer be forced to fight in a store where there is no referee. We can now be sure that the fight is a fair one and that the winner deserved the victory.

a flat panel display... well it should be the last one standing. But in order for this to happen some simple rules need to be put in place. First, no weapons. Weapons are cool and all but no one these days is trained in weaponry. Guns would be nice, but then the fight would be too short lived. Second, well I ran out of rules so the second rule is there are no rules (except for weapons, those aren't allowed). I can't wait for the day when I can sit at home on Black Friday, turn on the TV and watch wacked out people fight for material items the way they were meant to, in the ring. 🐮

25 people died in this store alone. That's not counting the 32 missing, and 67 injured, as well as the mentally scarred...

News in Briefs: One of These Grains, Doesn't Belong...

By Cameron Long ~ Daily Bull

Sri Lanka has declared war on wheat. No, I'm not shitting you. The government started banning wheat products "because wheat is a foreign import, alien to an essentially rice-eating society and costly for its economy." The National Freedom Front, one of the government parties, says wheat is part of a "conspiracy" by multinational companies to undermine Sri Lanka's food security. Actually, wheat is so vital that 2,000 Sri Lankan bakers have had to close shop. The Sri Lankan government is pretty full of themselves if they think that their food security matters worth a damn on the world stage.

Rawwww,,,, terrorists rawwww..... evil wheat.

It stands to reason that if there are thousands of bakers who rely on wheat and that wheat can be banned from government buildings, fast food joints, and most public areas, Sri Lanka isn't "essentially rice-eating" anymore, despite what it might have been decades ago.

These whackjobs are even calling wheat bread eaters "terrorists" - this from a country that had a front row seat for the 2008 Mumbai terrorist attack. Oh, and they say this ban will lead to healthier diets. When was the last time you heard of someone die of obesity, cancer, a heart attack, pneumonia, sepsis, ANYTHING FOR CHRIST'S SAKE, and people said, "If only he hadn't had so much wheat in his diet?"

future, he elaborated "If I ever get home, I'm gonna laugh at everyone 'cause they're so old. And hey, I bet Obama isn't president anymore." True dat, sir. Anyhow, back on earth, NASA has been working feverishly to get us home since the minute we left. They've only stopped working for Thanksgiving, Christmas, Spring Break, summer vacation, birthdays, national holidays, weddings, breakfast, lunch, dinner, siesta, nap time, and a week in 2024 when they all went to Washington to fight for their very existence.

Communication has finally been established, and NASA was shocked to hear we were all not only alive and well, but completely oblivious to our condition. My only answer to this strange ignorance is that we all studied for midterms for about 40 earth-years. Our friends had mid-life crises and children before we were done with World Cultures. Now that we're self-aware, we can apply our minds to help NASA find a solution, which should make things go a bit quicker. When we get back, we'll all make millions selling our everyday MTU stories. On the bright side, snow's here! 🐮
