Hobo with a Shotgun Review

By Stephen Whittaker
~ Daily Bull

It's been a long time since I have done a movie review, but recently I saw a movie I could not just leave alone. Everyone needs to see this movie. Let's be up front and tell you that it is one of the most fucked up movies I have ever seen, and believe me I have seen some real messy movies.

I don't want to give up too much to you, because this is something you have to see. Words simply cannot do it. The basic idea is: a hobo rides into a town on a train car then proceeds into the city. This is not your average city though. It's a dark town where crime runs rampant and the city is ruled by a twisted crime lord known as "The Drake."

The Drake uses fear as his method of maintaining control of the city, and he instills this fear using various gruesome methods. Just as an example,

Pastafarians Publish Protested Penne-Praising Prayers

By Ryan Grainger - Up 'n Coming Writer

The first New Pastafarian Church opened its doors last week, welcoming all into the House of the Flying Spaghetti Monster. Pastafarianism, the belief that the universe was created by a sentient mass of spaghetti and meatballs, has been under fire recently for its controversial book of prayers. Pastafarians are peaceful in nature, and are confused by the allegations of intentionally publishing the incendiary benedictions. Among the payers listed in the complaints is the celebrated "Ponderance of Thy Balls," which opens with the following:

*"Oh Dual Orbed One in the Sky
Thy carbohydrated-ness is reknown
throughout the land
For thy appendage has touched our humble Pastafarian flock
And in our praise to thee, do we thank thee for extending your noodley ap-pendage.
For a life of dogma sure beats living in the real world!
RAmen."*

And so, Adam, was touched by the FSM's noodley appendage.

For when you just can't conquer that mid class boredom.

he removes his brother's head using barbed wire and a car while a bunch of townfolk watch. beating a man hanging upside down from his feet with baseball bats. They spare no expense for their quality family entertainment.

Lead role played by a hobo. Based on true events.

The hobo eventually wanders into the Drake's hideout/ bar/ arcade of horrors. In it you can ride bumper cars too, and we get to see what happens when a person's head is placed between two colliding bumper cars. In this place there are people being tortured and murdered left and right. In fact there is

After a while the hobo, sick of his life as a hobo, manages to scrape up enough money by eating glass to buy a lawnmower to start is own business. He is going for a big time operation with the slogan, "You grow it, we cut it." To obtain this money, he ate glass while a man offering money filmed it. The unnamed hobo then proceeded to a pawn shop to buy the lawnmower. While there, armed men come in and hold the place up. They don't notice the hobo – who, at this time, finds a shotgun near the lawnmower he wanted to buy.

With shotgun in hand, the brave hobo then begins to fight back. Eventually the Drake calls in The Plague, a duo of ar-

Protesters believe that the prayers should be censored due to their seemingly risqué content. One of the highest-ranking Pastafarian priests, Father Hal E. Luya remarks, "Pastafarianism is our faith, and I don't believe that we should change our prayers to reflect the views of others".

At this time, the Pastafarians have no plans to censor any of their texts. Despite the tension between the protesters and the church Father Hal E. Luya comments, "We wish them the best. May the Flying Spaghetti Monster's noodley appendage touch them all." 🍝

Editor's note: there should also be a prayer involving creamy white alfredo sauce.
