Living Scientists Upset Over Dead Scientist Winning Nobel Prize

By Alex Dinsmoor
~ Daily Bull ~

Living scientists all over the world are up in arms over the Nobel committee's recent decision to stay firm on their decision to let a dead scientist receive the Nobel Prize. The committee noted that they "didn't know he was dead" in a statement that seemed eerily similar to National Lampoon's Vacation. Their recent decision seemed to hit a nerve with scientists worldwide.

"It's not fair that some dead guy won the prize," stated an upset scientist. "Besides the fact that he can't spend the million dollars, his research mustn't have been that good, since he ended up dying from the same thing he was researching. It's like they gave him the award since he "died" to make his family feel better. It was probably a ploy to get grandpa's estate."

Internet Reveals Real Life Achievement System

By Simon Mused ~ Daily Bull

In just a few short weeks, the Internet will be ready to unveil their IRL achievement system, which is completing its first round of beta testing. According to direct sources, any organization, governing body, corporation, and website are able to award achievements made 30 years' worth of progress in just a few short weeks. Completionists worldwide have paved the path to a greater tomorrow as they work day in and day out in the attempt to collect "Cured HIV" and "Rescued 10 Lost Hikers."

Of course the system also has its shortcomings. With every site able to generate its own badge, and with no means of hiding certain badges in its current form, porn websites are capable of awarding "Fapmaster: 5 consecutive hours" while other less noble sites can award "FFFFFFFUUUUUU: Read 1000+ Rage comics." Internet trolls have set up badges such as "Registered Sex Offender" and "Kitten ers gained roughly 10% of all ~100,000 badges currently available in the first week. With badges obtainable ranging from "Adopted a Puppy" to "Volunteer at the Homeless Shelter," the human condition in almost every major discipline has

... Dieing to win from front

In response to the decision, scientists worldwide have all decided to create a Facebook page appropriately titled "1,000,000 strong for living Nobel Prize winners!!!" When we reached the page's creator, scientist Norbert Gutenslagfen for comment, he sent us this statement: "It was definitely a challenge to convince my colleagues to join the group, since most of them didn't have Facebook accounts before the campaign started, but after I mentioned to them how Facebook persuaded Saturday Night Live to have Betty White on as a host after a million people joined her Facebook campaign, they quickly joined the cause."

The recent decision has not only struck a nerve in the living community, but also in the living dead community as well. Zombies worldwide are organizing protests in Stockholm, Sweden, the city in which the award is presented in. Zombies, as the minority feel that they were also unfairly passed over in the Nobel committee's decision to honor a dead person. "Zombies have made great strides over the years in many fields, yet we will always be stereotyped as "those things that make movies scary." As a zombie population, we seek equality in the eyes of the Nobel committee."

*Nobel Prize in my eyes, bitches!
The living can S my undead D!*

With all the uproar over the recent decision, the world's population is left in uncertainty over next year's possible winners, but we do know that this is a very real possibility that they may not be as lively as the winners before them.

Punter Regional Champion" that has the completionists only slightly more hesitant than usual to commit the necessary objective. Employers will find those with less admirable (and in some cases kind of creepy) badges a tad less than employable.

There are also neutral badges for those who do not want to leave their basement and help someone just want to take it easy one afternoon. Badges like "Uploaded 20 pictures of cats" and "YouTube Commentator" and the ever popular "FIRST!" are a must for the causal real life person. Finishing your homework on time would get you a punctuality badge, making a really awesome sandwich for yourself will get you one of many sandwich connoisseur badges, and meeting someone on a dating site will get you the "Totally Hooked Up" badge. normally would, except now I will get a prize every time I laugh at an adorable kitten.

The Internet is abuzz with these achievements, but one must ponder the cultural implications of having every minuet accomplishment of their life be rewarded and put on display in a public kiosk. Or don't because it hasn't really stopped anyone before. Once the badge system is out of beta and given to the whole world, one can only imagine the utopian society that would emerge as a result. Or it would go about like it Badge Awarded: Bull Article Written! (Nice!) (Authors note: Overlooking embellishments, this is not a joke.
