MTU's Hunt for a Lost Idol

DJ Benjamin

MTU has had construction on campus out the wazoo for several years now, having publicized that it is part of a "Master Plan" to build up and reform the campus to prepare it to be a school growing in enrollment and disciplines for years to come. From the HSTEM complex, to McNew Hall, to maybe possibly finishing the new DOW elevator shaft, MTU has been deep in the throes of tearing up parking lots and pavement for their new constructions.

However, recent investigations have uncovered that all the construction, and the entire "Master Plan", has simply been a cover up for MTU's real objective. This realization came to light when construction expanded from just MTU campus across Houghton, where the parking deck by the water was knocked down last year, and Kestner Waterfront Park (more commonly known as Chutes and Ladders) is in the midst of being torn up and redone. This has caused MTU's annual Cardboard Boat Regata to be relocated to Chassell Centennial Park, creating just enough of a logistical headache for everyone involved that some people began prying a little deeper into what exactly was being done at Chutes and Ladders. This was coupled with Student Leadership and Involvement announcing a rather strange homecoming competition event for this year: the hunt for the Immunity Idol. According to organizers, the Immunity Idol will be hidden in a different place around campus each day, with clues for the location provided on SLI's Instagram page.

It didn't take long for the sharp investigative minds on the case to put two and two together: the real reason for all the construction, and this hunt, is that MTU has been searching for some priceless artifact (an "Idol") for years now, knowing it was buried somewhere around the area but not sure exactly where. Finally having found it in their most recent construction operation, buried deep in the sand at Chutes and Ladders, it subsequently went missing, and now they are recruiting the student population to look for it for them, giving them clues to the likely suspects each day, saying they found it once enough people have collected similar-looking items that they're convinced it's not in that location. Admittedly, it's a perfect plan— the offer of a waiving a parking ticket is pretty enticing. If students can find 3D printed frogs and turtles, a priceless idol will be child's play.
