Questionable Search History

DJ Benjamin

I was recently thinning the herd in my Chrome Window of a Thousand Tabs when I rediscovered some of the most random websites I could scarcely remember a reason for even visiting. I took a deep dive into my browsing history for just this past week, and here are the most interesting nuggets.

- "Treaty of 1842 | Keweenaw Bay Indian Community" - Showed up multiple times on multiple days. I have no idea why.

- "Children of the Corn" - Read the synopsis and it sounded kinda mid to be honest with you.
- "did the israelites in 0 CE drink beer" - Only wine is mentioned in the Bible but apparently beer has been popular among the Israelites for a very long time.
- "Permissible Exposure Time for Noise SPL sound pressure level and duration Guidelines" and "Noise Nav 1.8.xlsx" - 3M has a whole Noise Nav database and it's unironically one of my favorite things to browse. This is the spreadsheet for if you want to know the peak sound level from a 'Golf club, thin-faced titanium driver' measured from 1.7 meters away averaged across 6 different clubs hitting 3 balls each. And if you want to know how damaging it will be, you can look up the Permissible Exposure Times.
- "man car mine houghton", "Mining equipment", "Keweenaw Fault", "Copper mine maps", "Syncline", "984 km to miles", "mtu construction projects" - Bet you can't guess whenabouts I looked up all of these. Unless you read the papers from last week, in which you probably can guess.
- "crappy cars" - _(ツ)_/

- "Is michigan technological university nonprofit" - No: it's a public research university.
- "129 db" - Supposedly the sound level of the loudest scream ever recorded. Also comparable to a jet engine.
- "control desk add text" - No comment.
- "Battle of Uhud" and "Battle of Otumba" from Wikipedia, and a search for "cortes aztec charge" - There were like 10 more Wikipedia pages about other battles and also one for Mount Uhud. I'm pretty sure I half-asleep went down a YouTube autoplay rabbit hole at some point in the distant past and in my stupor watched a video about the Battle of Uhud, then something just recently tickled my brain and I needed to find it and also apparently the completely unrelated Battle of Otumba.
- "boogieing" - Are you boogieing? No? Well, you should be. It's fun. And the correct spelling for the present participle form of "to boogie".
- "Case Summaries | ORI - Office of Research Integrity" - I found the case summary of one Dr. Jon Sudbo, who lied out his ass to the USDHHS for years for all that sweet sweet grant money. Highly entertaining read.
- "Citrulline" and "are people allergic to watermelon" - Yes, and it's because of citrulline and also there's a lot of citrulline in the rind.
- "mtu branding guidelines" - Needed to find that sweet sweet #ffcd00.
- "affiliated professor", "adjunct professor", and "associate professor vs professor" - Apparently, associate professors have tenure, affiliated professors are professors paid by one department but also teaching in another, adjunct professors are part-time contract workers, and just "professor" is the highest level of professor.
- "throes of despair" - Literally searched this at 10:35 AM on Wednesday morning. I guess Hump Day was hitting real hard.
