Bird Stages Coo

S. Wallow

On January 10th, at approximately 5:51 pm local time, a bird by the name of Sonnet, successfully staged a coup and overthrew the e-board of The Daily Bull. Sonnet, who is a 0 year old rock pigeon, has quickly risen to prominence among the writers for The Daily Bull. It is believed that his recent QnA, which appeared in Vol 86-No 2 of The Daily Bull, was a bird whistle to his followers, signaling that the plan was about to take flight. It is unknown when this plan was first hatched. His flock stormed The Daily Bull office and restrained the e-board. This group included students loyal to him and an unknown number of hawks, two is the number reported by eyewitnesses however this number is disputed.

The fate of the e-board is unknown at this time as they were last seen being put in large bird cages and carried away. Those who were able to fly away have established an opposition newspaper in exile called The Occasional Oxen. After gaining control, Sonnet sent an email to all remaining staff of the Bull, saying "o19o3nlneklksdfl;'a'"[a[[s[[[[pp", showing his intent to continue newspaper operations as usual and to peck out any remaining dissenters. He quickly used his newfound authority to rename The Daily Bull into The Daily Bird and terminated the partnership with Fusion Café and replaced them with an unknown bird seed manufacturer. It is reported that this manufacturer is where dissenters are being sent on co-op. The distribution of articles is now being done by carrier pigeons, who deliver them directly to willing and unwilling potential readers.

Since his successful coup, Sonnet has not left The Daily Bird office and is rumored to be perching on the bull that this newspaper was once named after. The only ones allowed to see him are his most trusted flock mates, who are gathering nesting material for him. University president Richard Koubek is expected to release a statement soon on this fowl breach of RSO regulations.
